NEW Chancellor Kwasi Kwarteng has been branded "shameful" for drawing up plans to scrap a cap on banker bonuses in the middle of the cost of living crisis.

The EU measure limits annual payouts to twice a banker's salary.

But reports say Mr Kwarteng may ditch it to boost the City of London's competitiveness post-Brexit.

The cap still means a banker on a salary of £1million can pocket £2million on top of that in bonuses.

But Mr Kwarteng, who worked as an analyst in financial services, is said to have told City executives last week: "We need to be decisive and do things differently."

However, TUC general secretary Frances O'Grady said: "Bonuses in the City are already at a record high. While executives rake it in, millions are struggling to keep their heads above water.

"The Chancellor's number one priority should be getting wages rising for everyone – not boosting bonuses for those at the top."

Fran Boait, executive director at the group Positive Money, said: "Gifting bankers uncapped bonuses at a time when millions of households are choosing between eating and heating is speculation ahead of "fiscal events", beyond tone deaf - it's shameful."

Luke Hildyard, executive director of think-tank High Pay Centre, said: "Removing the cap would be a pro-

Q: When was the cap introduced?

A: Through EU legislation in 2014 as part of City reforms.

The UK initially launched a legal challenge, but then Chancellor George Osborne later conceded defeat.

Q: Why was it brought in?

A: To reduce the chance of bankers taking excessive risks for large rewards, part of the culture that led to the 2008/9 financial crisis.

Q: Has it worked? A: Despite the cap, bankers have still be able to

Shell boss to quit.. almost £80m richer

BY GRAHAM HISCOTT

THE fatcat boss of oil giant Shell is quitting after scooping nearly £80million in pay and perks.

The firm yesterday confirmed chief executive Ben van Beurden will step down at the end of this year.

The news comes as Shell has been condemned for making huge profits on the back of soaring energy prices caused by Russia's war in Ukraine.

Mr Van Beurden, 64, has netted about £78million in salary, bonuses and add-ons since taking over in 2014.

The Dutchman will remain as an adviser to the board until next June.

Shell chairman Sir Andrew Mackenzie said of the announcement: "Ben can look back with great pride on an extraordinary 39-year Shell career, culminating in nine years as an exceptional CEO."

FOUR in five low-paid workers say the cost of living crisis is their worst financial period ever.

Some 78% of grafters earning below the Real Living Wage - equivalent to 3.7 million workers - say they face a dire struggle.

MURDERED

BY HOLLIE BONE

THROUGH the heartache shone a glowing tribute, flashes of pink everywhere to celebrate a little angel who lit up many lives...

It was Olivia Pratt-Korbel's favourite colour and mourners yesterday had been asked to "add a splash" at the tragic youngster's funeral.

And they all duly obliged. Pink T-shirts, butterfly badges, teddy bears and even sunglasses were everywhere.

But the grief etched on the faces of relatives at the service for the murdered nine-year-old was a stark reminder of the emotional trauma.

Olivia's mum Cheryl clutched a pink teddy bear as she opened the moving service at St Margaret Mary's Church in Knotty Ash, Liverpool.

Wearing a pink cast on the wrist where she was shot as a gunman burst into her home and killed her daughter, the 46-year-old broke down and refused to say farewell.

Cheryl said: "Liv was loved and adored by everyone and she will never be forgotten. I will never say goodbye but what I will say is goodnight, I love you, see you in the morning."

Babies in pink dresses, children in pink football kit, and young girls wearing pink T-shirts bearing Olivia's face flooded the street as hundreds gathered to pay their final respects. Houses nearby had placed pink wreaths on the doors or tied pink ribbons to their gates.

It was a reminder of the day cheeky Olivia painted her nails pink, breaking St Margaret Mary's Catholic school rules, and hid her hands from teachers all day. In that school, next to the church, pupils yesterday painted their nails and watched her favourite film Matilda. Her name was also displayed in class windows.

A grey cloud hung in the sky, traffic stopped and the crowds fell silent as Olivia's coffin arrived at the church on a white horsedrawn carriage. The casket was covered with pink butterflies, a rainbow pattern and surrounded by flowers and teddies.

In her heartbreaking eulogy, Cheryl paid a moving tribute to her daughter. She said: "On Thursday, 13th June, 2013 weighing just 4lb 2oz my beautiful Liv came into this world.

"She was six weeks early and spent nine days in the special baby unit. She was so small.

"As Olivia grew we quickly realised she was very independent, even as a toddler she wanted to do things for herself.

BY RUSSELL MYERS Royal Editor

PRINCE William confessed he was haunted by memories of his mum Princess Diana's funeral as the Queen's coffin this week.

He admitted he was still close to tears yesterday as he met members of the public at Sandringham.

Thousands turned out to see the Prince and Princess of Wales as they looked at the sea of floral tributes to Her Late Majesty left at the Norwich

William and wife Kate, 40, stayed side by side throughout the 30-minute walkabout yesterday, kneeling to read tributes and smiling at Paddington Bears left in the late Queen's memory.

OUEEN ELIZABETH II: 1926-2022

BY RUSSELL MYERS Royal Editor

THE Queen will be laid to rest alongside her beloved Prince Philip at Windsor Castle after the nation says a last goodbye.

Two thousand people including world leaders will gather for her state funeral at Westminster Abbey in London at 11am on Monday.

Afterwards more than 800 people, including members of the Queen's Household and Windsor estate staff chosen especially by Her Majesty, will attend the committal service in St George's Chapel, Windsor Castle.

At 7.30pm, following one of the most extraordinary periods in British history, the Queen will be interred alongside her husband of 73 years, watched by King Charles and members of the Royal Family.

The state funeral is expected to be watched on TV by a billion people around the world. It will "unite people across the globe and resonate with people of all faiths", said the Earl Marshal, the Duke of Norfolk, who is in charge of the proceedings.

He described the task as "both humbling and daunting. An honour and a great responsibility".

He said: "Her Majesty's passing has left many people with a profound sense of loss.

"The Queen held a unique and timeless position in all our lives. The events of recent days are a reminder of the strength of our constitution, a system of government, which in so many ways is the envy of the world.

"This has been felt more keenly over the past few days as the world comes to terms with her demise."

Presidents, prime ministers and royalty from around the world will gather over the next few days to pay tribute to Britain's record-breaking monarch of 70 years.

Nearly 200 key workers and volunteers recognised in the Queen's Birthday Honours list have also been invited to the funeral.

Harry, who did two tours of duty in Afghanistan, was stripped of his military appointments and banned from wearing uniform in public after quitting his royal role in 2020.

QUEEN ELIZABETH II: 1926-2022

IN CAR Alongside Meghan behind coffin

EXCLUSIVE

BY RUSSELL MYERS Royal Editor and RACHAEL BLETCHLY

he Queen saw her as a second daughter and a trusted confidante. Sophie Wessex shared a unique bond with her motherin-law and her grief has been overwhelming since Her Majesty's death.

But yesterday Sophie got to share her sorrow with the big-hearted people of Manchester during a visit with her husband Prince Edward.

And as the caring Countess of Wessex hugged and consoled scores of well-wishers it was easy to see why the monarch found such solace in her warm and affectionate company.

But the depth of their bond and Sophie's unique place within the Royal Family are only now becoming clear.

Because the Mirror has learned that the Countess, 57, will be handed a raft of the Queen's royal patronages as a gift from her beloved late "Mama".

A royal source said: "The Queen and the Countess had a fantastically warm and joyful relationship.

"Her Majesty admired Sophie's quiet sense of duty, her strong work ethic and the way she balanced her public and family lives. They also shared many of the same interests.

"The Queen's decision to pass on these patronages reflects the closeness of their bond.

"Sophie's growing popularity with the public is also evident and she will take on a larger public profile in a new-look monarchy of King Charles."

Sources suggest the patronages earmarked for Sophie to take over include the Women's Institute and Dogs Trust.

She is already patron of over 70 charities and organisations - such as Childline and Blind Veterans UK - and has been widely praised for her dedication and empathy.

That empathy was on display while she and Edward were in Manchester to see floral tributes to the Queen in St Ann's Square and to light candles in her memory in the city's cathedral. As she got out of their car, Sophie spotted a lad in a Union Jack baseball cap holding out flowers

HEARTFELT Tributes to The Queen

She was good'un, say folks of Ilkley

PAUL ROUTLEDGE LIFE RESUMES

"YOU going to London?" chaffed the coffee shop customer to the postie. "You should be - you work for Royal Mail!"

There is humour in the death of the Queen, but not a lot, and the town that likes to think of itself as the queen of Wharfedale isn't the obvious place to look for it.

But since I'm here, let's have a dekko. Er, when did you last hear someone use that phrase, and what does it mean?

I digress, as usual. Round here, grief is under-stated, like money. Ilkley, it was always said, is more posh than the Queen. The town has the most disposable income in Yorkshire.

Its good fortune was built on sheep. Wool merchants made their money in Bradford and came here to spend it. Even the charity shops sell fur coats.

UPMARKET

Except for WH Smith's giant posters, the shop windows are testament to royal reticence. Betty's tea shop, obviously too upmarket for the sovereign, has a tiny notice in the bottom of the window.

I go to the town hall for floral tributes and the book of condolences. "Our great Queen, our head of state and the nation's grandmother" remember Adam, Sarah, Henry and Lucy on one bunch of flowers.

The book indoors has an entry, "Thanks for everything. You've been a good 'un" from Andrew and Jenny. I like to think Her Majesty would have liked that down-to-earth voice of gratitude.

I certainly did.

But ever onwards, ever, er, sideways on the bus to Skipton and my favourite micro-pub, Early Doors, where there is never any shortage of down-to-earthiness.

"They should leave them alone," growls regular attender lan, His Grumpitude. "Let them grieve in peace." Amen to that.

QUEEN ELIZABETH II: 1926-2022

FAREWELL In the hall yesterday

A private moment for public to grieve

BY BEN GLAZE Deputy Political Editor, in Westminster Hall

CRADLING her bump with one hand and holding her toddler son with her other, the pregnant mum who came to say farewell to the Queen may have reflected on how her children will have been born under different monarchs.

She was one of hundreds of mourners who filed past the lead-lined, English oak coffin resting on a catafalque in the middle of Westminster Hall.

Some dressed in black, one woman's hat and veil barely concealing her grief.

Others were more casual - the teenager in a grey Nike tracksuit, the schoolgirl aged about eight in her blue and pink hoodie, men in jeans and jumpers.

At least six mourners are said to have tried smuggling in their dogs for a final look.

Everyone had queued for hours to pay their respects.

EMOTIONAL

Nearly all stopped to bow, curtsy or simply stand in quiet contemplation.

The mourners were a crosssection of society: young and old, formal and informal, stiff upper lips and emotional millennials. All races.

Several came on wheelchairs or mobility scooters. A blind man clutched a white stick.

A dummy-sucking child was strapped to his weeping mother's chest. A middle-aged woman had a Union Flag neck scarf round her throat.

And a mother supported her anguished 20-something daughter, while others wiped away their tears.

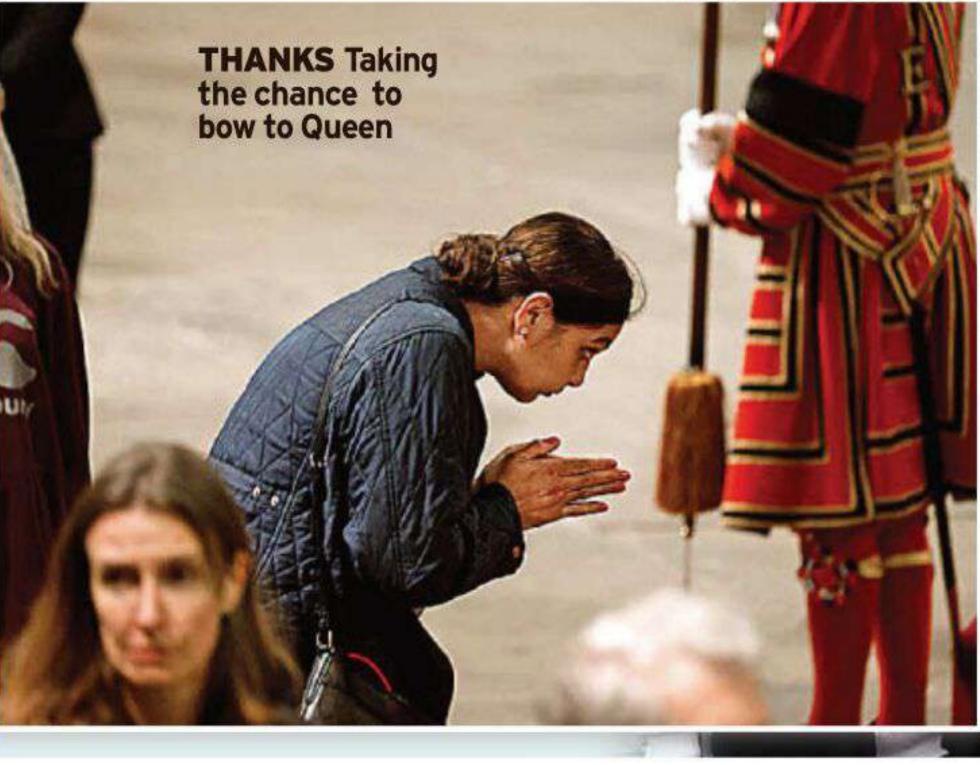

While this was public grief, it was also very obviously a private moment for everyone who came to mourn.

Most, perhaps unconsciously, turned back just before leaving through the north door into New Palace Yard - desperate for one final glimpse of the only British monarch most have known.

Janet Wood, 88, and Sam Walters, 15, live in South Yorkshire and Somerset respectively.

But yesterday, this pair who would never have reason to meet, spent the day in the queue to see our former Queen, Elizabeth II, lie in state.

It's a surreal place to be but for such a sombre event, a lovely one.

Suddenly a London landmark all of its own, the queue runs like a river alongside the Thames to its own groove, solemn and quiet but largely upbeat. There's no pushing or pressure, I'm told repeatedly. It murmurs with gentle chat and camaraderie.

Despite the warnings of its relentless pace and length - last night the wait time had stretched to around nine hours – folk haven't been put off.

A great leveller, every age, class and race can be found here, and testimony to the late Queen's ability to unify, it's the best place in the land

Thankfully, they have met Dawn Warrington, 54, of Kingston, South West London. She has been

Bonus cap slap in face

BRITAIN is in the grip of its worst cost of living crisis for more than 60 years.

Workers desperately need a pay rise so they can settle their bills, cover their rent and put food on the table.

You would have thought that helping people through these tough times would be the Government's priority.

But when it comes to offering support it is not nurses nor care workers whom Liz Truss worries about. It is bankers.

Her Chancellor Kwasi Kwarteng is drawing up plans to lift the cap on their bonuses.

Forget the millions who have seen their incomes hammered by soaring inflation or the families struggling to feed their children or the pensioners unable to heat their homes.

The group Mr Kwarteng has decided needs special treatment is the City fatcats.

The Tories argue the bonus cap is hampering the UK's financial sector from competing with the United States and Asia. If this was the case then the banks would not be reporting record profits and bonuses in the financial sector would not be at an all-time high.

By being cheerleaders for corporate greed Ms Truss and co have shown their true colours.

It pains us all

FOR the last seven days the nation's thoughts have been with the Royal Family.

As we mourn Her Late Majesty we also remember that other lives have been lost and other loved ones have been buried.

They include Olivia Pratt-Korbel, the nineyear-old shot dead in her Liverpool home, whose funeral took place yesterday.

The torment her family has suffered has been made all the worse by the fact her killer is still at large. In this week of loss and reflection, we are reminded that all lives are precious and all families can be touched by grief.

And express too, in their own way, the grief and loss they struggle to articulate.

They also made marmalade sandwiches in class. The late Queen, one suspects, would have smiled widely at that.

Up and down the land, primary schoolchildren, many far too young to understand death and its permanence, have been reflecting on the Queen's loss by drawing.

Some have written poems, prayers, too, but it is their pictures that have best allowed them to explore their memories and feelings.

From Nottinghamshire and Birmingham, to Jarrow in the North East, and back in the capital, children have been processing the national mood and learning about the late Queen and our new King.

Most have drawn the Queen herself, and she is rarely without a smile.

Paul Craig, headteacher of St Joseph's Catholic Primary School, Jarrow, part of Bishop Chadwick Catholic Education Trust, which the Queen visited in 2002, said: "A lot of the younger ones don't understand the impact the Queen had, but for many of the older ones she was a significant figure in their lives.

"We also have to be mindful of children who have had a family bereavement. Drawing is a good way to express emotion." Teacher Sarah

YOUR VOICE

FRIDAY 16.09.2022 DAILY MIRROR 17

Even in death our late Queen has achieved unity, bringing together the generations, people of all faiths and creeds, as well as bridging the political divide. Now as we observe a period of official mourning, may we follow her example and endeavour to live with compassion and tolerance. Thank you, Your Majesty, for your long life of service and duty. You did your country and people proud. The world is better because of you.

Jacquelyn Allsop, Lowestoft, Suffolk

■ I'm really impressed by how young people have shown their gratitude for our late Queen Elizabeth. The large queues gathering to pay their respects are an amazing sight. I was also impressed at how King Charles greeted the people, while his speech paying tribute to his late mother was perfect and had me in tears by the end. It was a fitting tribute to a wonderful Queen. The floral tributes and messages from all over the world show how much she was respected and admired.

Dave Mellor, Warrington, Cheshire

■ I echo Boris Johnson's observation that many of us are far more upset at the Queen's passing than we expected to be. The loss of a monarch in situ for a lifetime and whose conduct has always been exemplary takes away a little bit of each of us. Now King Charles and Queen Camilla must take up the onerous duties of monarchy. They are of an age when others would peruse brochures of mobility scooters, but I have little doubt King Charles III will be a good king. He's had many years to observe his mother in preparation. Steve Sanders, Bournemouth, Dorset

■ The Queen would have been so proud of the way her family have conducted themselves throughout this very public mourning. The Princess Royal deserves special praise. She remained at her side as Her Majesty's cortege drove six or so hours from Balmoral to Edinburgh without a break. Then to see her walk alongside male members of her family in full military regalia as the cortege progressed from Buckingham Palace to Westminster Hall was very touching.

Jean Prior, Epping, Essex

- As an American, I'm proud of my English and Scottish descent. I've long loved, admired and respected Queen Elizabeth II. I saw Her Majesty once. I was outside Buckingham Palace, awaiting the Changing of the Guard, when the gates opened and Her Majesty's car drove past. She was smiling, waving, wearing a mauve tinted hat. In her absence, something has gone out of the world - a stalwart dignity, a quiet grace, a presence as steady and dependable as the rising and setting of the sun and turning of the tides. Thank you for sharing her with us and with the world. Michelle Lindsey, Charleston, South Carolina
- It was fitting that the Queen passed away at Balmoral. It was where she could be most herself. I love the story told by her former protection officer Richard Griffin about when US tourists, who failed to recognise her, asked if she'd met the Queen. She said she hadn't but "Dick meets her regularly". The late Queen had a wonderful sense of humour. Diane Bartlett, Manchester
- I had a lovely reply from the Queen after I wrote to her saying my soldier son, Gareth, had met Prince Harry, who was serving in Iraq at the same time. I treasure the letter. Wendy Tilley, Cardiff

SACKINGS Transport cops

'Pinch and slap' police booted out

BY DAN WARBURTON

TWO senior policemen who slapped and pinched the bottoms of junior female officers on a night out have been sacked for gross misconduct.

Special Chief Insp Andy Whitworth and Special Sgt Gary Sims were said to be part of a "laddish culture" which existed "from the top down" within the British Transport Police.

The pair, based in the Midlands, were dismissed without notice after the allegations were found to be proven at a hearing in Camden, North London.

SCI Whitworth was said to have touched the female officer as she left a nightclub before winking and walking away.

SPS Sims smacked another officer on the bottom with such force it "radiated throughout her body".

Zach Small, 33, partner Kim Girard, 29, and his daughters Anua, eight, and Willow, five, were sailing to the UK from the Azores when there was huge bang and water gushed in on the night of September 2.

They had hit a sleeping whale and Zach sent out distress signals. After hours in the sinking vessel an oil tanker saved them.

But they lost the boat and all their possessions.

Builder Zach, from Birmingham, said: "We poured everything we had into the catamaran. It was our home, our dream. But we're safe now."

DRUG GANG'S MONEY N COSTA RAID

Kinahan 'launderer' swoop Amount police claim Morrissey could have 'JOHNNY CASH' laundered in 18 months Cuffed Morrissey led away in his surf shorts

BY TOM PETTIFOR, Crime Editor, and GERARD COUZENS

AN alleged member of the Kinahan cartel dubbed "Johnny Cash" has appeared in court in Spain accused of helping to launder £302,000 a day.

Johnny Morrissey grimaced as he was led away in cuffs from his Costa del Sol bolthole wearing yellow floral print surf shorts.

His wife raised her middle finger as she was marched out by armed police.

Detectives said the former doorman, identified this year by US authorities as a leading member of the Irish mob, could have laundered more than £173million in the past 18 months.

Spanish police believe the cash was spread around the world using Hawala, an ancient money transfer system.

The informal network, originating from an Arabic term for transfer or trust, has been adopted by criminals who use code numbers or tokens to prove cash is due.

A spokesman said: "The Civil Guard has smashed the most important international criminal organisation that operated in Spain dedicated to money laundering.

In a little over a year and a half they could have laundered more than €200m [£174m] through Hawala."

As well as three arrests in Spain, a former Costa del Solbased Irish expat was taken into custody in the UK.

Nearly a dozen searches of homes and businesses took place in Spain and Britain, including two in Glasgow and one in Heywood, Greater Manchester.

Sources close to the probe revealed the investigating judge had declared it "secret" to protect proceedings.

Morrissey, nicknamed Johnny Cash when he ran a restaurant in Cork in the 1990s, was so close to alleged cartel boss Daniel Kinahan, 45, he was invited to his wedding in Dubai in 2017.

US authorities named him as an enforcer also involved in laundering for the Kinahan cartel as part of an appeal for information alongside Daniel and his dad Christopher Sr.

Morrissey is the first on the list to be arrested since it went public in April.

The cartel emerged in Dublin in the 1990s and the US says it is one of the world's largest crime groups. Daniel is said to use Dubai as a "hub" for activities in Ireland, the UK, Spain and the UAE.

It was such a natural visual delight that the special effects teams from House of the Dragon and The Rings of Power must have been weeping into their mediaeval craft ales.

Those shots of the Northern Lights were so clean, bright and tangible, I was waiting for laser harp botherer Jean-Michel Jarre to pop up and start strumming them.

In a world where The Repair Shop exists, it would be wrong to say Channel 5's All Creatures Great & Small is the warmest and most uplifting programme on TV.

It's pretty close though, and if last night's third series opener was anything to go by, the gap could narrow again. It's a lovely cuddly ball of fuzzy nostalgia, gentle humour, amazing scenery and cute animals.

It's far from twee though. And much of the credit for that must go to the sizzling chemistry and snappy bite between Siegfried Farnham (Samuel West) and his housekeeper Mrs Hall (Anna Madeley), both left, who are like a long-married couple still flirting with each other over breakfast and bickering in the hallway.

One minute Mrs Hall will be fixing Siegfried's tie, the next she'll be growling: "Why is that thing always out of its cage?" She was talking about his new pet rat. At least, I hope she was.

PS. With so many strong accents flying around, I was indebted to the subtitles more than once last night.

Not least when Glaswegian James Herriot announced that his parents were "staying at the Falcon Inn again".

Throughout her long and eventful life, Queen Elizabeth II famously kept out of politics.

However, in death she has, hopefully, caused one or two people to calmly reflect on one particular political hot potato: The future of the BBC.

Other channels may well be available. But, as has so often been the case over the past 100 years, in its hour of need much of the nation turned to the BBC.

When the news of Her Majesty's death broke a week ago, the vast majority of those who wanted to follow it on television voted with their remotes.

With all due respect to the efforts of ITV, Sky News and the noisy neighbours at GB News and TalkTV, I must admit I did likewise.

The question was would the BBC still be able to deliver in this fractured and frantic day and age? There have been one or scuffs two and stumbles along the way for sure.

I even agreed with its decision to postpone the launch of Strictly Come

The big challenge was to strike a balance between respecting and upholding all the establishment pomp and tradition, and offering the viewers the chance to remember and celebrate in human terms – a woman who meant so much to so many.

The BBC may not be perfect, but this week it once again proved that when it's good it is utterly invaluable.

SCIENTISTS believe they have found what could be the oldest heart ever, dating back 380 million years.

Found on a reef off western Australia, it came from a fossilised jawed fish of the Devonian period, between 419 million and 359 million years ago.

Alongside the heart, researchers found a separate fossilised stomach, intestine and liver.

Prof Kate Trinajstic, of Curtin University in Perth, Australia, described the finds as "remarkable".

SARAH Beeny says that she is beginning to love her new blonde wigs after starting chemotherapy.

The Channel 4 star shaved her head after most of her hair fell out due to breast cancer treatment.

Sarah, 50, now wearing a wig, posted a picture of herself on Instagram holding a clump of hair.

The mum of four told fans: "In 24 hours most hair fell out and I've shaved the rest off."

Yesterday she added a photo with long blonde hair and said: "New day, new wig. This might be more fun than I expected!"

Celebrity Juice presenter Keith Lemon, 49, praised her, saying: "Looks ace!"

The ex-Property Ladder host went public about her cancer late last month.

Pooch is safe after 6-hour drain ordeal

BY MICHAEL WILK

A DOG was saved after six hours stuck in a tidal drain.

All hope for Denver had vanished and owner Fred Palmer had returned home to fetch a blanket in which to wrap his pet's body.

But the plucky labrador managed to swim down the drain to where it met the sea and was found huddled on a ledge about to be covered by the tide.

Fred, 73, said Denver liked playing in the open drain, adding: "One minute he was there, the next the water had sucked him in."

Locals joined rescue workers in the search at Northam Burrows, Devon.

Fire crews reduced the water flow in the sewer and stationed spotters near its outflow.

Fred, of Bideford, said: "I want to say a big thank you to everyone who helped."

RUSSIA slammed six missiles into a Ukrainian dam, flooding part of President Zelensky's home town.

The attack was seen as Vladimir Putin's revenge for recent humiliating setbacks in the seven-month war.

Angry Volodymyr Zelensky called Russia a "terrorist state" after strikes on the reservoir near Kryvyi Rih, in the south of the country.

He added: "You are weaklings who fight civilians. Scoundrels who, having escaped from the battlefield, are trying to do harm from somewhere far away."

Many people living below the dam were evacuated but last night water levels were said to have "dropped considerably" and no casualties were reported.

Last night it was also reported that a mass burial site with 440 graves was found in the eastern city of Izyum, after its liberation from Russian control.

Serhii Bolvinov, chief police investigator for the Kharkiv region, said the bodies would be exhumed and examined to gather evidence of Russian war crimes.

He said: "It was especially shocking and horrific, and is a crime against humanity.

"It shouldn't be like this in a civilised world in 2022. I am confident that the evil will CHALLENGE Zelensky definitely be punished."

Yesterday EU commission president Ursula von der Leyen said that Ukraine would have the backing of Brussels for as long as necessary.

During a joint news conference with Mr Zelensky she added: "We will never be able to match the sacrifice the Ukrainians are making.

"But what we can tell you is that you'll have your European friends by your side for as long as it takes."

Meanwhile, Germany announced that it will supply two more multiple rocket launchers and 50 Dingo armoured personnel carriers.

In Kyiv, nerves were rattled yesterday when Mr Zelensky was involved in a car crash in Victory Square.

Video showed a badly damaged VW Beetle in the middle of a street with an injured man next to it.

Mr Zelensky's team said their boss was not seriously injured.

Bradley Green and two others are accused of doing £1,500 to £2,000 of damage to Marwell Zoo, Hants, in February 2021.

Social media appears to show a bottle thrown at a giraffe and a tiger being scared, causing it "significant distress", Basingstoke magistrates heard.

Stones set to keep Rolling into their 80s

BY MARK JEFFERIES Showbiz Editor

THE Rolling Stones' longtime keyboard player Chuck Leavell says the band plans to keep on rocking, even in their 80s.

Chuck, 70, joined the band in 1982 thinking he would have "three or four years with them".

But despite the Stones celebrating six decades performing with their Sixty tour and both Sir Mick Jagger and Keith Richards pushing 80, they are in no mood for quitting.

Chuck told Goldmine magazine: "How much longer can it go on? I don't think any of us know, really.

"As long as we are able to perform at this level, as long as we stay healthy, as long as the fans will come.

"One thing that is for sure is none of us have lost the desire or passion."

AFTER a glittering career spanning 24 years which has delighted millions of fans across the world, Roger Federer yesterday announced he is quitting tennis.

The 41-year-old eight-times Wimbledon champion has been plagued by injuries and operations in recent times and has not competed since a quarter finals loss at SW19 last year. He will now hang up his racket after the Laver Cup at the O2 Arena in London next weekend.

The Swiss star, known for his unflustered style and considered by many as the greatest player of all time, thanked his legion of fans for filling his many successes with "joy and energy".

Federer said: "Of all the gifts that tennis has given me over the years, the greatest, without a doubt, has been the people I've met along the way... my friends, my competitors, and most of all the fans who give the sport its life.

"You will never know how much strength and belief you have given me. As many of you know, the past three years have presented me with challenges in the form of injuries and surgeries.

"I know my body's capacities and limits, and its message to me lately has been clear.

"I am 41 years old. I have played more than 1,500 matches over 24 years. I must recognise when it is time to end my competitive career. I want to thank you all from the bottom of my has helped make the dreams of a young Swiss ball kid come true. Finally, to the game of tennis... I love you and will never leave you."

Federer, who was born Wimbledon singles titles in Basel to a father from Switzerland and a South African mother, was a ball boy in 1992 and 1993 at the Swiss Indoors tournament.

He started his professional career in 1998 aged 16 and went on to win 20 Grand Slams – the first male player to do so. His first was at Wimbledon in 2003. He is the only one to win five straight US Opens and he also scooped six Australian Opens.

> Federer had an amazing knack of never looking ruffled or exhausted, even after gruelling matches that lasted hours.

> He shared one of sport's most famous rivalries with fellow champs Rafael Nadal and Novak Djokovic, who have 22 and 21 Grand Slams respectively.

> Paying tribute, Nadal posted: "I wish this day would have never come. It's a sad day for me personally and for sport."

> Wimbledon said: "We will so miss the sight of you gracing our courts. Thank you for the memories and joy you have given so many."

> Married to former tennis player Mirka, they have four children together. He said she "lived every minute" with him.

> He is believed to have earned more than £812million through prize money and endorsement deals.

SUGGS ON HIS

gig at the iconic Dublin Castle pub in London could be the big break Madness needed, but there was one problem – the Camden venue was known for booking country and western bands, not ska.

Frontman Suggs and his group came up with a cunning plan to get on stage.

Suggs says: "We decided to lie a little bit and say we were a country and western band, because the Dublin Castle was an Irish pub and that would make you more likely to get a gig.

"It was ridiculous. One of us even put a cowboy hat on to make it look more authentic.

"But when seven teenagers started dancing around and playing ska, the Irish regulars were bemused.

"Getting our first gig was a real highlight, and it took off from there. Sometimes people wouldn't dig what you were doing, and you'd get bottles thrown at you."

The 61-year-old singer says: "Some of the acts that have come from shows such as X Factor wouldn't last five minutes in the pubs we used to play in."

But he remembers those pub gigs at the beginning of his career fondly, as a time filled with fun and laughter.

He says: "It was such an explosive and creative time in the late 1970s. You would squat in a building in the daytime and play a gig in a pub in an evening, and that's why so many great bands came out of that period."

Pubs have always played a major part in the musician's life as his mother Edith Gower worked behind a bar. And now

Suggs, whose real name is Graham McPherson, is on a mission to find out why Brits love their pubs so much, presenting the them. There were some great stories coming out about communities getting together to keep their local pub open.

"Pubs are the focal point of our towns and villages. Even if you're not a big drinker, you can go and find out what's going on locally.

"They're also crucial in helping to beat loneliness, as they are places where you can go and sit for a couple of hours to spend time talking to other people, so it's all utterly depressing what's going on with energy bills and the price of everything putting some at risk of closing.

"They've been part of British culture for more than 1,000 years – they're not the same abroad – so hopefully they won't die out just yet. Anything we can do to promote pubs is great with me."

In Britain's Greatest Obsessions, different celebrities investigate the things we love. Liza Tarbuck, Lorraine primary days Kelly and Chris Packham delve into topics such as the weather, the Second World War and pets, with all the presenters coming together at the end of each episode to share their findings.

Suggs had a great time working with them, and has even found a new friend in Springwatch presenter Chris.

He says: "It was really lovely, it was a really eclectic mix, but they're all really nice people. Chris especially was hilarious and we really got on.

"I know he is a bit of a new wave punk fan and he's a very funny bloke."

Born in Hastings, East Sussex, Suggs was raised by his mum Edith after his heroin addict father William McPherson left the family home.

The young Graham got his nickname from randomly sticking a pin into an encyclopaedia of jazz musicians to find a new, non-Scottish name. After hitting on Peter Suggs, he took the surname and refused to answer to anything else. Suggs found fame in 1979, when the first Madness album, One Step Beyond, made it to No2 in the charts. With singles such as Baggy Trousers, It Must Be Love and Our House, the band has sold more than six million records.

be famous and how that can make you feel more important than you really are. Fame can be a dangerous substance and a lot of my generation did die of it.

"In the show, I tell stories about my career, and sing a few songs with a pianist. It can be a bit nerve-racking as you're doing a two-hour monologue and there's none of the band to distract you, but it's very rewarding when it goes well."

After a successful run of gigs this summer, Madness have another album on the way later this year.

While Suggs jokes that the band have been going on for "too long", he puts the secret to their longevity down to the fact that Madness is very hard to get into, but "impossible" to leave.

He says: "It's this train that keeps rolling on. We are friends from school and we had a lot of hits, more than a lot from our generation.

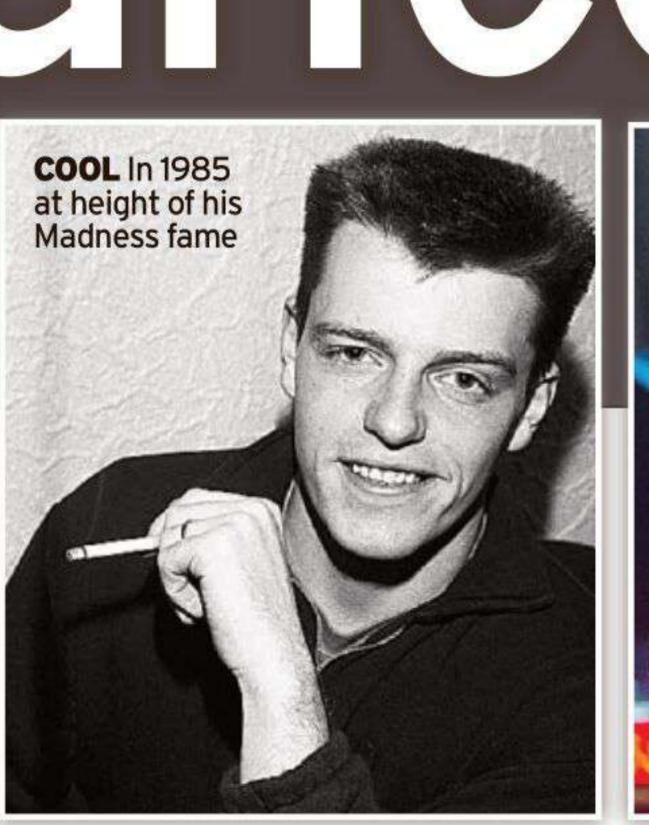

"People just like what we do, which is He says: "It's all about what it's like to a privilege. We have done so many festivals over the summer and we even get young people coming to see us.

How to introduce your children to mindfulness (being in the present)

I try to use mindfulness when I can, in a very simple form - literally, being in the present - and that has the effect of excluding painful memories from the past, preventing me from getting anxious over "what ifs", and worrying about things in the future that I have no control over.

Timing is important

There's no 'preferred' age to start mindfulness, you can begin at any time.

Young children can benefit from practising mindfulness and can be really good at it. You could start with something very simple such as blowing and watching bubbles for no other purpose than to be focused on what's in front of you.

Where/how to do it

Spring and summer are great because there are so many things going on: flowers blooming, fruits and vegetables growing, birds chirping, bees buzzing - all great things to focus on.

The aim is to increase the length of time you and your child are experiencing it. The more you can avoid distraction or frustration, the longer you can go. Discuss their experiences afterwards and talk about how they feel.

Be open and explain what mindfulness is

Talk to your kids about what to expect from mindfulness and prepare them for certain obstacles in approaching it. You should practise it together so your child will feel comfortable sharing their own experiences.

Tiniest blood vessels hold clues to your heart health ealthy arteries are essential for our wellbeing, and arterial disease, which causes them to harden, is behind several serious chronic conditions.

But could arterial disease be discovered early to head off conditions such as diabetes, cancer and autoimmune diseases?

Coventry University's Centre for Intelligent Healthcare (CIH) is trying to answer that question with new equipment and techniques that could be used for microvascular imaging generating pictures of the body's smallest blood vessels.

The research will focus on how changes in those vessels can be linked to early-stage disease using different colours of light to accurately assess blood flow and the blood's temperature and composition, which can all help to detect circulatory problems non-invasively and at low cost.

For instance, the researchers will investigate new ways to assess the severity of Raynaud's phenomenon - a circulatory condition which causes fingers and toes to change colour when a person is cold or anxious.

It's hardly ever considered serious on its own but it can sometimes be the could be used in the NHS.

Professor John Allen of CIH is leading

Coventry University's research isn't confined to finding better diagnostic techniques. It also has applications in assessing health and wellbeing such as the concept of vascular age - a marker of circulatory fitness measured by studying the stiffness of arteries – a topic of international interest.

It's currently difficult to measure adopted by healthcare providers."

vascular age reliably, so Coventry University is teaming up with other scientists, engineers and clinicians, through groups such as VascAgeNet, to develop low-cost ways of assessing the health of a person's circulation.

The techniques the team are using not only detect abnormal blood flow but can also assess high-quality blood flow.

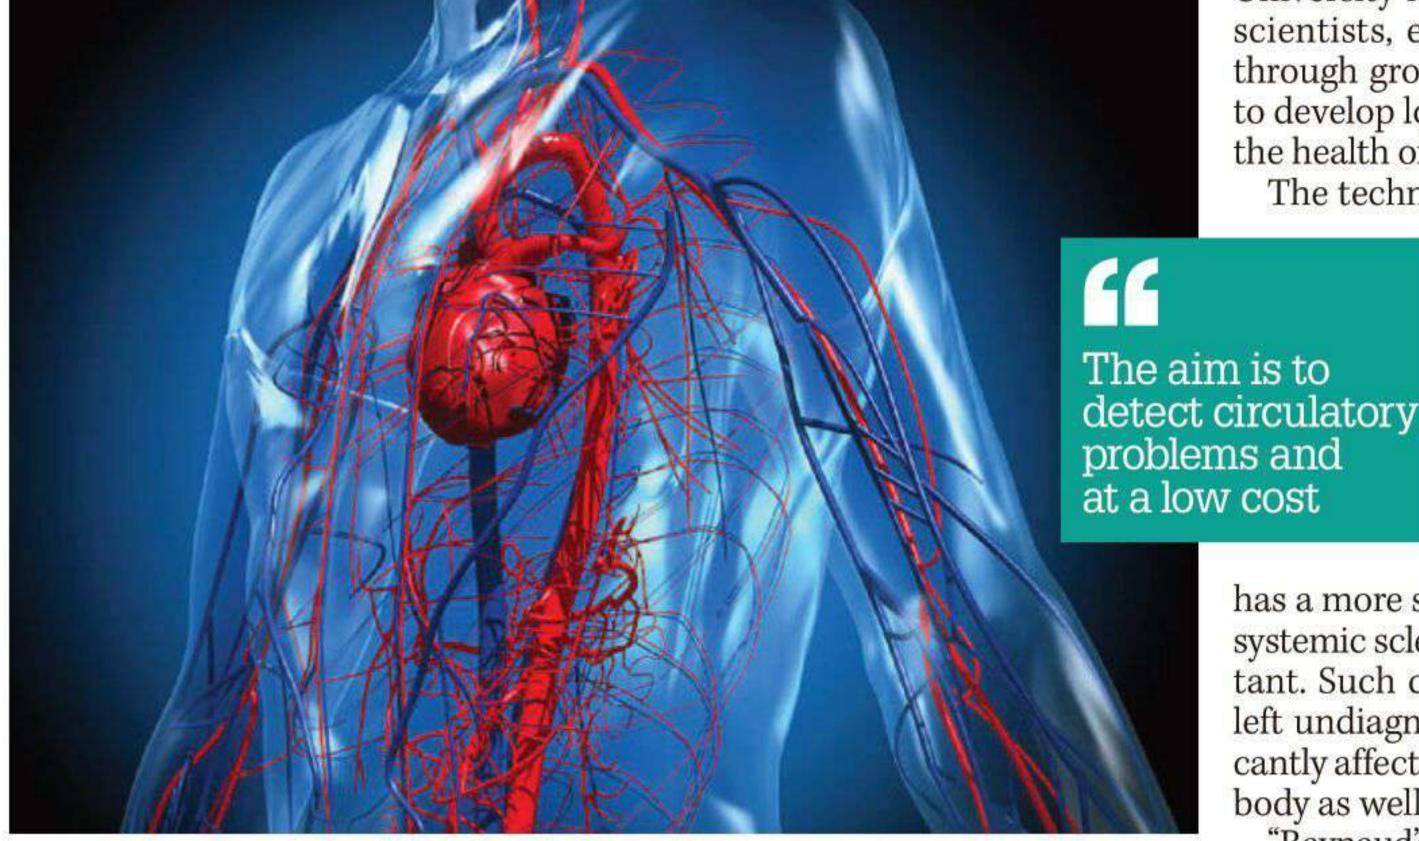

Professor Allen says: "Detecting Raynaud's quickly and taking subsequent tests to determine if a patient has a more serious condition, such as systemic sclerosis, is incredibly important. Such conditions should not be left undiagnosed, as they can significantly affect the internal organs of the body as well as the skin.

"Raynaud's can be an early symptom of such an underlying condition.

"The new technology will also help us to study conditions such as diabetes and cancer in novel ways.

"Our tests are not only about the diagnostic techniques, but also to make them more affordable and accessible, and therefore more likely to be

I'm thinking of having the flu jab for the first time later this year and I'm interested to know how it works. Also, will the jab give me flu?

I'm glad you r I'm glad you're having a flu jab. About 10-14 days after the jab your body makes antibodies that help protect you against any similar flu viruses you come across, so the vaccine will protect you for the upcoming flu season.

The flu jab can't give you flu because all injectable flu vaccines are 'inactive' and don't contain live viruses. However, a flu vaccination can take up to two weeks to begin working so it's possible to catch flu during this time.

The flu jab is designed to protect you against the most common and potent strains of flu viruses circulating during this season. There is, however, still a small chance you can catch a flu virus from a strain which isn't included in this year's vaccine.

The jab doesn't protect you against the common cold so you can still catch cold viruses circulating in your community.

Diabetes drug leads to substantial weight loss

In a trial of a weekly injection of the anti-diabetes drug tirzepatide, overweight participants lost as much as a fifth of their body weight, compared to just 3% in those taking a placebo.

Tirzepatide works by simulating the effects of two hormones that help people feel full after eating. This is a big study, involving 2,539 adults from nine countries, and as such carries weight (pardon the pun!).

KNOW YOUR FOOD: Spices with health benefits

Spices make our food tastier but they have health benefits too. Here are a few examples: Garlic Many studies have indicated that eating garlic can reduce cholesterol levels as well as keep blood vessels healthy, especially in women.

Cayenne pepper Most peppers contain capsaicin, a compound which makes your mouth hot after eating them, and cayenne Ginger This one's not only a trusted remedy pepper is no different. It can help lessen pain by reducing the number of pain signals sent to your brain.

Cinnamon This spice's naturally sweet taste can help reduce sugar intake, and by doing so can lower blood sugar levels in people with type-2 diabetes.

for a cold but it's also efficient at soothing pregnancy-related nausea. It can also help alleviate motion sickness or even prevent symptoms altogether.

Turmeric It's claimed the curcumin in turmeric helps arthritis pain, curbs inflammation and boosts heart health.

Surfer pup making waves in therapy eet the UK's first ever surf therapy dog, Rescued from death row as a stray in Portugal, the poodle-cross now lives in West Sussex where his special skills and bright blue mohawk have made him a local star.

Kirstie Coy-Martin, 48, saved him back in 2016 after seeing his photo online.

"When he was found in Portugal they were going to take him to a pound, but it was full, so he was going to be put to sleep," explains Kirstie, who is a police officer. "I saw his picture and his eyes and fell in love with him. So, I brought him over here."

A keen surfer herself, Kirstie taught Scooter how to balance on the board while using cushions to resemble waves, before progressing to the sea.

Kirstie said: "I follow lots of surfy and dog things, and discovered that in America there was such a thing as surf therapy dogs. I thought, wow, I wonder if I could teach Scooter."

The duo now spend their days helping others as part of not-for-profit Scooter's Surf School and he also visits patients in hospitals and care homes. This summer, the impressive pup has

He made great progress with a 13-year-old, Ander, who struggles with severe anxiety. After missing the first two sessions because of his condition, Scooter was able to encourage Ander out of his car, into a wetsuit and eventually on to a surfboard. By the end of the sessions, Ander wanted to join his local Wave Therapy surf club. Mum Laura Etherington said she was blown away by the change in her son.

"I've never seen him love a sport as much as surfing but I honestly don't think we would've got him in the water without both of you," she told Kirstie.

Scooter also took part in the One Wave Bracklesham Bay charity surf, raising £2,000 to get an adapted surfboard so he can ride waves with disabled children.

He also took to the beach to campaign with Surfers Against Sewage about the pumping of sewage on to beaches in his local area and is set to release a children's book called Scooter The Surfing Dog Finds His Forever Home.

I work for a dog-friendly company - should I take my dog into work with me?

You need to make sure that this is something that your dog can cope with and will enjoy. Think about your dog's personality and behaviour, and consider if they are suitable for your work environment. Will they settle easily and are they comfortable with other dogs and people? If they worry about people they don't know, or get over-excited with other dogs, it would be worth thinking about whether this is the right environment. Is there some training you can do to prepare them?

Consider their physical health too. Do they struggle with stairs, for example? Are they up to date with their flea, worm and tick treatments? You also need to think about where they will spend the day while you're working, if there is somewhere they can relax, stretch their legs and go to the toilet? What if you have a meeting?

You must also think about your commute and if it's suitable for your dog. Are they comfortable on a train or bus, especially at busy times? If you drive to work, do you have suitable restraints?

Speak to your employer about what arrangements are in place to have your dog at work. Dogs Trust's Dog Friendly Workplaces programme helps businesses welcome canine colleagues with training and support for their employees.

Dear Coleen

I'm a 28-year-old woman and I've been with my partner since university but I've been thinking of leaving him, because I've found the past few months really difficult.

The bottom line is, we want different things and argue about it all the time.

He wants us to leave our jobs and go travelling, while I've been very keen to have a baby and take a career break. He's never been against having a family, but says he doesn't want to do it in the near future.

So, here's my dilemma. I've discovered I'm pregnant and now don't know what to do for the best. Over the years we've been a bit rubbish when it comes to birth control so I guess it was bound to happen at some point, but it couldn't have come at a worse time.

Do I stay with him because there's a baby on the way or do we call it quits so he can go travelling and I can focus on being a mum?

mirror.co.uk YOUR MITTOY COMMUNITY CORNER Lets do this together Edited by SIOBHAN McNALLY

I regretted the words, "It's raining hard - would you like a lift to school?" as soon as they slipped out of my mouth the other morning.

Never one to make any unnecessary physical effort, The Dark Lord snapped up my offer, and I duly dropped her off right by the school gates just a four-minute drive away before going to the park with the rain-shy dog.

It only takes 12 minutes to walk to The Dark Lord's school, unless you're a slacker teenager and you have maths for first period - in which case it can take anything up to half an hour.

However, TDL's new leaf has included turning up to school on time and, so far, she has more or less managed this grand feat.

Trouble is, we have had a shedload of rain (nobody's mentioning the drought now) and that means her 12-minute walk can get very soggy.

"You could always use an umbrella like a normal person," I suggested when she first started moaning about getting wet. "Or a nice kagoul?"

"Are you mad?" she said snippily. "Nobody at school wears a coat until their lips turn blue. And an umbrella would be total social suicide - strictly for neeks."

It's not the first time she's mentioned these neeks. "They sound like sensible children to me. The sort who go to orchestra practice and take triple science," I said wistfully.

Anyway since I offered the lift, TDL has been trying her luck daily, even on mornings with bright autumn sunshine.

"Muuuuumy, you know how I love you," she started wheedling. And I interrupted, "Yes I do, which is why I'm making you walk. It's literally the only exercise you get. You'll thank me when you're older."

"You're so lame," she grumbled.

And I shrugged. "Yeah whatever - remember to slam the front door on the way ou... Oh you did." Email me at siobhan.mcnally@mirror.co.uk or write to Community Corner, PO Box 791, Winchester SO23 3RP.

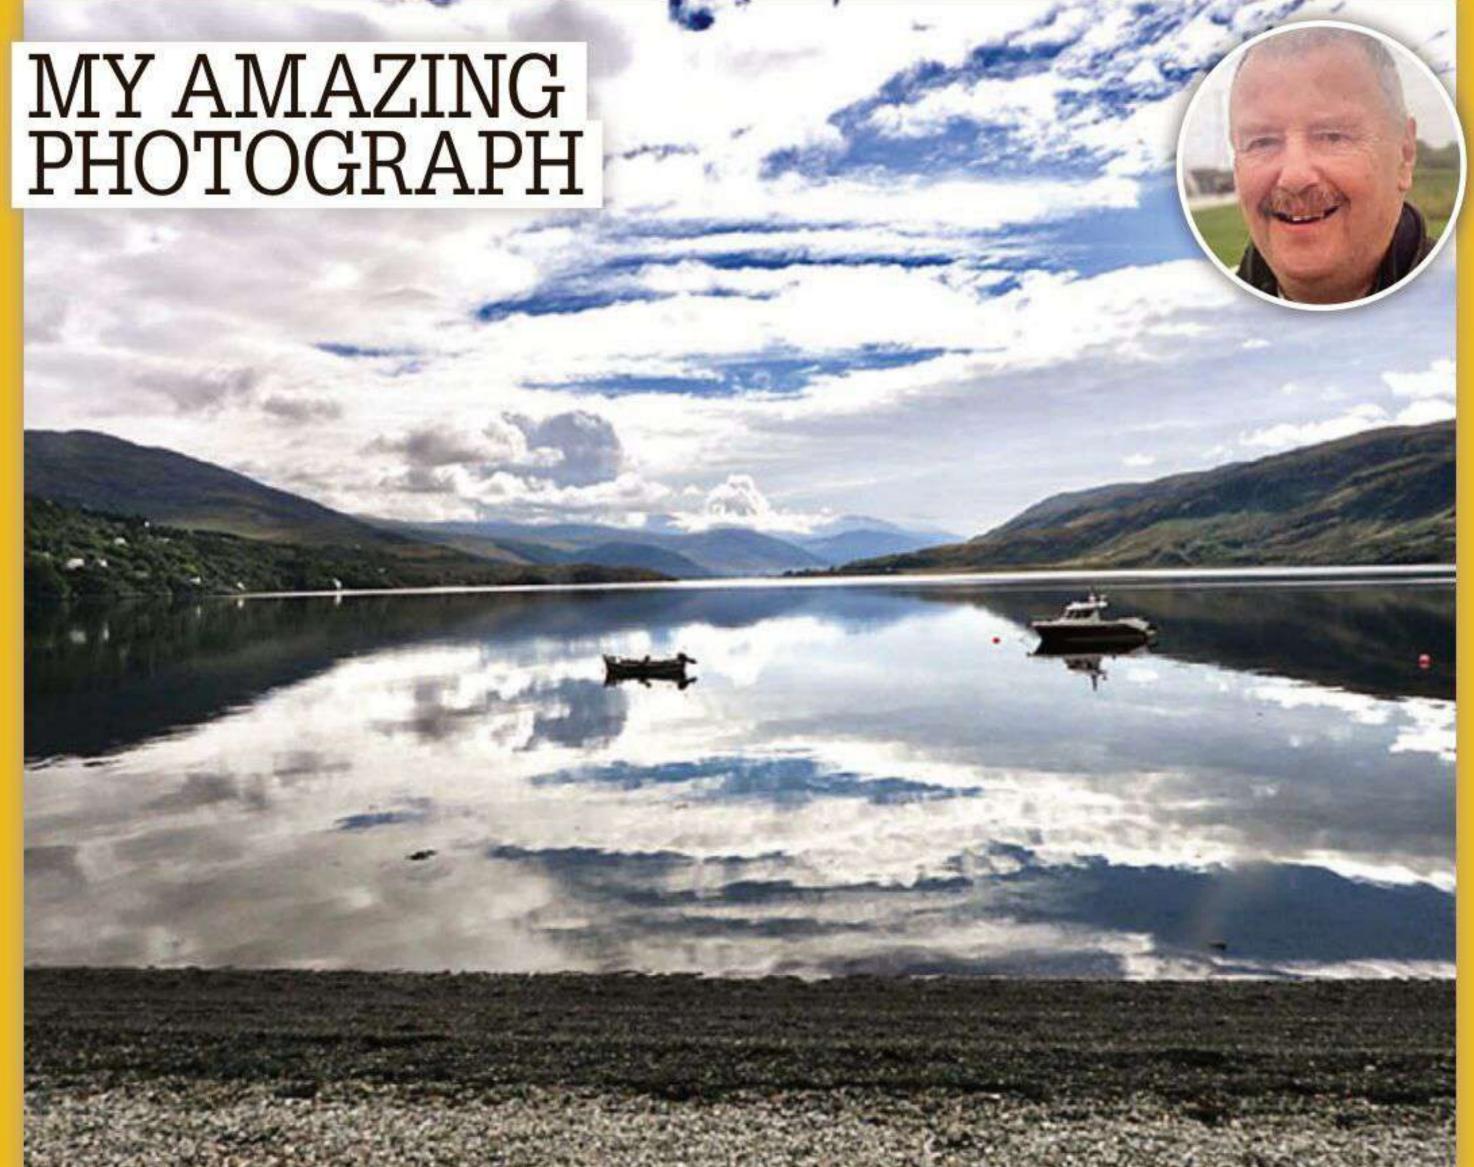

Please note, if you send us photos of your grandchildren, we'll also need permission of one of their parents to print them... Thanks!

"This little dog is called Rio and he belongs to my granddaughter, Lauren, and her husband, Russell Stein, who live in Brentwood," says Janet Norrington in nearby Wickford, Essex.

"He's a cute little fella and loves to sit with you when he is tired."

Another monarch who spent a great deal of time at Balmoral in the Scottish Highlands was Queen Victoria. The estate was bought by her late husband Prince Albert in 1852 and, for many years after his death, the widowed Queen retreated to her beloved Highland estate with her faithful servant John Brown.

His grave in the nearby village of Crathie was the destination for keen photographer Keith Stirling, who was touring around the north coast of Scotland last week.

The 75 year old says: "I'm a regular visitor to the Highlands. This year I went from my home in Notting Hill, West London, by motorcycle to Inverness.

"I went to the Highland Games and Balmoral to photograph John Brown's grave. I took this picture in Ullapool, and also got some shots in the mountains. I think it's fair to say I got an overdose of fabulous scenery."

MEMORIES

I've kept boxes and boxes of TDL's baby clothes, teeny first shoes, ballet tutus (before she was chucked out of the class), music certificates and athletic medals that she used to get regularly before she became a proud under-achiever.

But as Janet Langford's email reminds me, TDL's baby junk represents many happy memories and it's hard to let go.

The reader, who lives in Wolverhampton, West Midlands, writes: "Like the lady who keeps boxes of buttons but hasn't ever sewn a button on, I also keep a button box and a large box of sewing patterns for dresses that I used to make for myself and my daughters.

"One pattern is for a school dress that my mother made for me when I was 14. I am now nearly 84!"

When asked what random collection readers could not part with, clever Rosy Twelftree in Northampton put her beloved theatre memorabilia in verse.

Jeffrey Howe's gruesome end

THE TRUTH ABOUT MY MURDER

CBS Reality from Sept 21, 10pm

In 2009 Jeffrey Howe's body was found callously strewn across five different locations. In one of the most horrifying murders of recent times, Howe had been stabbed and his body dismembered by his lodger Stephen Marshall, who then hid the remains across Leicestershire and Hertfordshire, assisted by his girlfriend Sarah Bush.

At first the couple claimed they were innocent and knew nothing of Howe's death, but forensic findings told a different story... As a result, Marshall was jailed for murder and Bush went down for helping him cover it up.

The killing of Jeffrey Howe, dubbed 'the jigsaw man' because of the brutal nature of the crime, is just one of the astonishing cases explored in CBS Reality's new true crime series The Truth About My Murder. In this jaw-dropping show, forensic pathologist Dr Richard Shepherd delves into mysterious murder cases from the UK and the US, and explains how the victims were able to 'tell' investigators how they died - and who killed them even after their death. Using stateof-the-art technology, Dr Shepherd shows the wealth of evidence a dead body holds and how it can be used to bring murderers to justice.

Featuring interviews with investigators, the series paints a fascinating picture of how even the most fiendish killing can be solved. Dr Shepherd has conducted nearly 23,000 autopsies and helped crack countless crimes. He's a master detective in his own right, so is perfect for guiding viewers through the murky world of murder. Other cases in the series include Peter

Farquhar, who was drugged and murdered by a man he thought was his boyfriend but was just after his money. And there's Lesley Potter, killed by her husband, who hanged her to make it look like suicide. These are cases where the killer thought they'd committed the perfect crime, but couldn't bury the case-cracking secrets of their victims' bodies.

The Truth About My Murder will premiere on CBS Reality on September 21 at 10pm, and continues every Wednesday.

his life with the dead. As one of the world's leading forensic pathologists, Dr Shepherd has worked on some of the most high-profile cases of recent times, exposing evidence that would otherwise go unseen.

He's assisted the Home Office on huge investigations, including Princess Diana's death, the Bloody Sunday inquiry, and the cases of UK victims of 9/11. His work has found answers to seemingly impossible questions, helping to solve perplexing murders and bring closure to bereaved families.

Throughout my 40-year career as a forensic pathologist, I've learned that the dead never lie

DR RICHARD SHEPHERD CRIME EXPERT AND SHOW HOST

"Throughout my 40-year career as a forensic pathologist, I've learned that the dead never lie," says Dr Shepherd.

"In The Truth About My Murder, we uncover the truth behind some of the most intriguing murders and we show how the facts uncovered by the detailed, intensive forensic analysis of the victims' bodies and the crime scenes have meant that these killers didn't get away with murder."

Dr Shepherd is also the bestselling author of Unnatural Causes and The Seven Ages of Death, covering many of his remarkable cases. He's bringing his hit live show, Unnatural Causes, to theatres across the UK this autumn, from October 12 to November 11. WHO KILLED MY FATHER

Young Vic until September 24 Tickets: 020 7922 2922

The title is not a question but a statement. Based on Edouard Louis' 2018 autobiographical novel, this one-man play, adapted and directed by Ivo van Hove, explores the author's attempt at reconciliation with his dying father in northern France.

As a gay man, Louis was ostracised, suffering particularly at the hands of his macho factory worker father. But, as Louis' monologue unfolds, it is clear there are deeper undercurrents to their relationship that restore the connective tissue between the two men.

On an almost-bare black stage featuring a television and a bed, Dutch actor Hans Kesting as Louis holds us in the palm of his hand from the outset. A formidable physical presence, he transforms himself into Louis' shuffling, cigarettesmoking father by gravelising his voice and thrusting his fists beneath his sweater to convey his old man's paunch.

Recalling childhood days when, as a young pre-teen, Louis tried unwisely to entertain his father by dancing to Barbie Girl, Kesting shows a naive boy desperately seeking his father's approval. Yet, after he requested a DVD copy of Titanic for his birthday, his father surprises him with the Special Edition package and they sing Celine Dion's theme song over and over again together as the film plays out on the television set.

Smoke curls across the stage through side windows as Louis dives deeper into the political decisions by the French government and austerity cuts that indirectly cause his father's demise.

Kesting becomes volcanic with anger, delivering a urgent polemic against the French ruling class.

"For the ruling class, politics is a question of aesthetics," snarls Kesting's Louis. "For the poor, it is life or death."

Exposing the damage inflicted on the physical body by cuts in the welfare system, Louis, van Hove and Kesting collaborate on a blazing, powerful and essential play that blasts most single-character shows into oblivion. I haven't seen a performance like it in years.

LES BALLETS TROCKADERO DE MONTE CARLO ****

Peacock Theatre until tomorrow, UK tour until October 29 Tickets: trockstour.co.uk

> The drag comedy ballet company popularly known as The Trocks has come a long way since its origins in a New York loft in 1974 when their parodic pratfalls and frock tactics were an offshoot of gay cabaret.

Men in tutus and pointe shoes are funny enough but The Trocks have the talent of professional ballerinas and their performances are extraordinary and occasionally awe-inspiring.

Their evolution into a unique cultural phenomenon has broadened their audience commensurately; their sublime combination of humour, wit, mischief and dancing is universally enjoyable.

Taking the Russian model as their touchstone, the dancers rejoice in names like Minnie van Driver, Dmitri Legupski and Maria Clubfoot. Whether pastiching classics like Swan Lake or attired in evening suits and long dresses for the neo-classical mash-up Nightcrawlers, it is abundantly clear that the Trocks are at the top of their game. I advise you not to miss them. My name is Neil and I'm a Trockaholic.

TICKET TO PARADISE

Cert 12A  In cinemas on Tuesday

fter a pandemic-induced shortage of summer blockbusters, the UK cinema industry finally had something to cheer about earlier this month. National Cinema Day, when tickets were slashed to £3, managed to reacquaint 1.46 million people with the joys of the big screen.

Those whose livelihoods depend on this troubled industry hoped some of them would return this weekend for an all-toorare A-list romcom.

Sadly, it was not to be. Universal has decided it would be vaguely treasonous to enjoy a George Clooney and Julia Roberts movie three days before the Queen's funeral. The film will now come out on Tuesday, a day when many will be busy catching up on work, leaving nervous cinema staff counting empty seats over a long bank holiday weekend.

If they were releasing something vehemently anti-monarchist like, say, Braveheart (at the time of writing, scheduled to show on BBC1 tonight), I could perhaps see their point. But there is nothing remotely offensive about Ticket To Paradise, a comforting escapist fantasy.

Clooney is architect David, Roberts is his art dealer ex-wife Georgia, and the wedding of their only daughter Lily (Kaitlyn Dever) has forced them to travel to Bali together 20 years after a very acrimonious divorce. Lily

While they pretend to be supportive the pair plot to tear the couple apart

has decided to throw away her legal career to marry handsome seaweed farmer Gede (Maxime Bouttier) after they met on holiday.

After some amusing bickering, David and Georgia find something they agree on. They can't let Lily make the same mistake they made 25 years earlier. While pretending to be supportive, they plot to tear the couple apart.

The dialogue could be sharper but there are gorgeous locations (Australia doubled for locked-down Bali), a gooey romantic finale and some very amusing pratfalls.

Clooney savaged by a rogue dolphin and drunk dancing to House Of Pain with Roberts were the daft diversions I didn't know I needed.

MOONAGE DAYDREAM

Cert 15 * In cinemas now

Brett Morgen (Oscar-nominated director of the 2015 Kurt Cobain documentary) focuses on the art rather than the artist in this engrossing and wildly original film about David Bowie.

Made with the approval of the icon's estate, Morgen smashes the template of the rockumentary by opening with a lesser-known song from the later period of his career -Hallo Spaceboy, a great track from 1995 album Outside.

The next 140 minutes are a full-on assault on the senses as Morgen weaves candid home movies with little-seen concert performances and clips from films that Bowie acted in and those that influenced his career.

Other documentaries have made much of the various reinventions that marked his career. Morgen's loosely chronological musical collage gives us a sense of continuity.

As Mavis Nicholson points out in a perceptive interview, Bowie used himself as a painter uses a canvas. And, to Morgen, Ziggy Stardust and The Thin White Duke are two sides of the same coin.

While we hear plenty from Bowie, his voice culled from various interviews, we don't have the usual chats with friends or family members. There is a brief mention of his half-brother's suicide but I probably learned more about the main man from Gabriel Range's patchy 2020 biopic Stardust.

But, unlike Range, Morgen had full access to Bowie's music. And he uses it in dazzlingly original ways. He links live footage of the major tours, taking us from early 70s Ziggy Stardust performances to 1974's Diamond Dogs tour to thrilling live takes of later hits such as Heroes and Let's Dance.

Morgen also focuses on Bowie's devoted fans and explores the cultural importance of his gender-fluid image.

"You don't have to be bent to wear make-up," says one gruff-sounding young devotee. In the early 1970s, this sounded dangerously progressive.

Not all of Bowie's greatest hits make the cut but Morgen finds room for a long sequence cut to DJ, a great dance track from 1979. It sounds like it was released last week.

He's best known for playing villains but British actor Ed Skrein reveals hidden depths in this slight drama about the friendship between a faded pop star and an autistic teenager.

Twenty years ago, Vince (Skrein) was the frontman of a chart-topping boy band. Now he's busking in the streets of Peckham with a keyboard perched on an ironing board.

But he gets another taste of fame when a video of one of his street performances goes viral on social media. The star of the clip isn't him but young autistic boy Stevie (neurodivergent actor Leo Long) who turned the solo performance into an impromptu jamming session by thumping a metal bin with his drumsticks.

After tracking the kid down, Vince tries to persuade him to form a two-man band and perform a gig in a local pub. But first, he'll have to win over Stevie's protective mum (Eleanor Matsuura) who is worried her son won't cope with the noise and attention.

The plot is predictable but Skrein keeps us rooting for the wounded but big-hearted Vince.

STRAWBERRY MANSION

Cert 12A  In cinemas and on digital now

I suspect Bowie would have approved of Strawberry Mansion, a sci-fi oddity that blends whimsical humour with hallucinatory visuals. The year is 2035 and government interference has reached a new level.

Now, everyone's dreams are recorded on VHS tapes and pored over by tax inspectors.

Dreams and reality begin to blur when tax auditor James Preble (co-director Kentucker Audley) inspects the nocturnal fantasies of an elderly inventor (Penny Fuller).

There's a conspiracy and a love story but the film isn't really interested in plot. This is more about talking beetroots, mice in sailor's pinafores and frog-headed waiters.

There is always a darker side to fairy tales, with violence and menace simmering underneath the happy-ever-afters and the magic. And Stephen King taps into this darkness with his dazzlingly inventive fantasy novel where danger, quite literally, lies beneath the story's hero Charlie.

The book begins in the real world as the 17-year-old struggles to come to terms with his mother's death after a hit-and-run accident, while his grieving father is driven to alcohol. In a moment of desperation, Charlie gets down on his knees and prays to "whoever you are" to stop his father drinking.

After his dad gets sober in Alcoholics Anonymous, Charlie is convinced he must repay the debt. And he gets the opportunity to do just that when he discovers his elderly reclusive neighbour Mr Bowditch injured in his garden, having fallen off a ladder.

Charlie helps Mr Bowditch during his convalescence and looks after his beloved dog.

It quickly becomes apparent that Mr Bowditch has secrets including a mysterious locked shed in his garden.

But nothing can prepare Charlie for what he finds on the other side of the door hundreds of underground stone steps leading to a mysterious parallel world full of outlandish and at times terrifying fairytaleinspired characters.

As Charlie is drawn into an epic and dangerous adventure, will good triumph over evil?

Wonderfully imaginative and immersive, with a moving conclusion, Fairy Tale is a spellbinding read.

Undoctored Adam Kay

Trapeze, £22

ollowing the success of his bestselling memoir This Is Going To Hurt, Adam Kay is by his own reckoning "Britain's twelth-best-known doctor". Now he tells us what happened after the emotional strain as a junior doctor drove him to hang up his stethoscope and scrubs.

His new career as script writer and comedian was much less stressful - "The stakes were so refreshingly low – there's no formal inquiry when a joke dies" but horribly slow to take off.

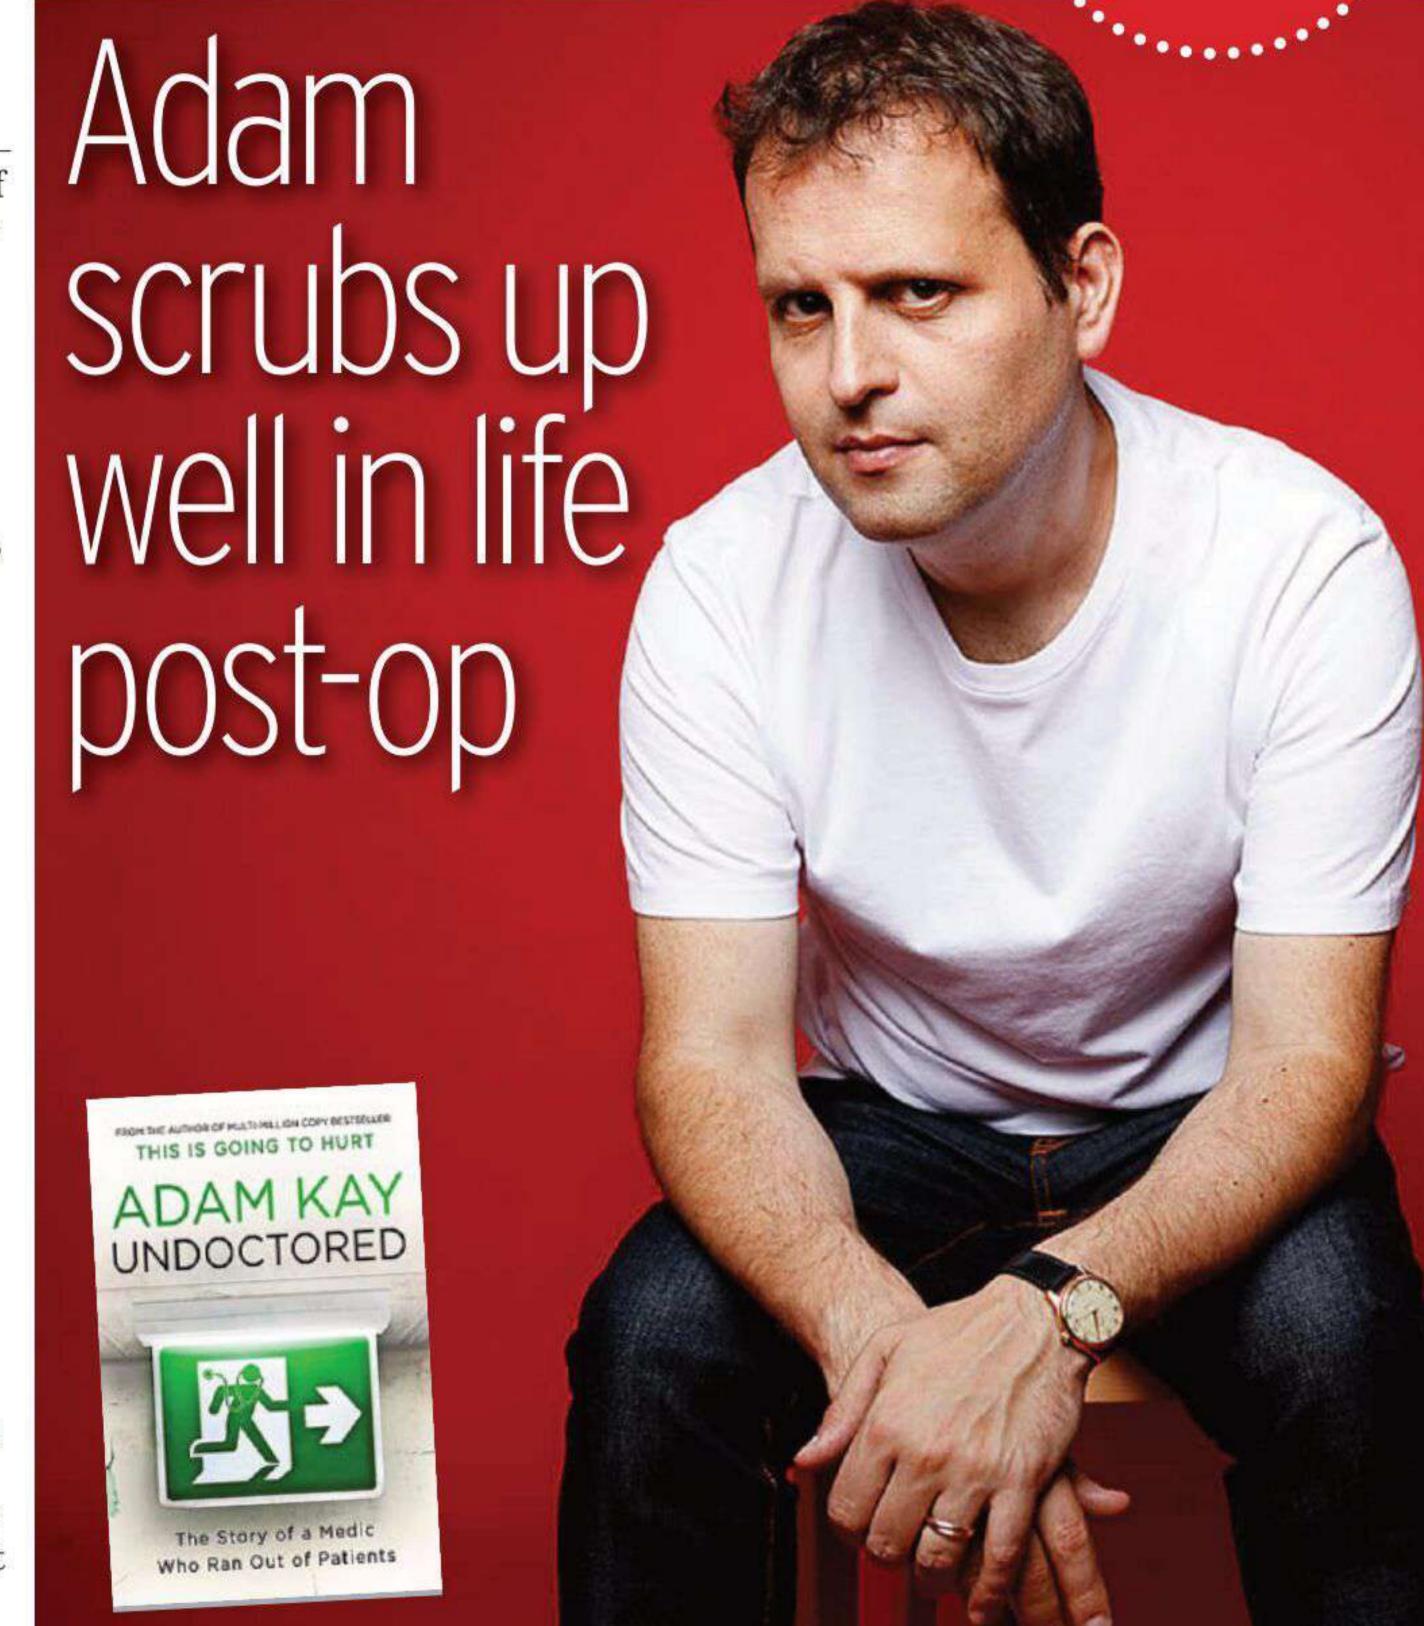

Feeling guilty about contributing virtually nothing to the household income, he decided to renovate his flat.

But he did such a bad job (the kitchen units were "wonkier than medieval teeth", according to his partner) that they had to move home.

Gradually though, Kay found success in his new profession – and he has used his fame to advocate for better emotional support for doctors (at least any support would be a start) and to go into battle against some of our dismal recent Health

Secretaries. As in the previous book, Kay is brave enough to present himself as neurotic, selfish, lazy and often just plain odd. The result is richly comic.

It sounds bizarre to say it but his account of the eating disorder he suffered from during his 20s had me almost crying with laughter.

Ditto his description of being harassed by a stalker. Yet, underneath the laughs, there is clearly a lot of pain and he also describes a horrifying assault that has blighted his life. Kay's first book was essential reading, if only to find out the truth about the people who hold your vital organs in their hands. This follow-up isn't quite as gripping as This Is Going to Hurt but Kay's writing is a constant pleasure.

Marple: Twelve New Stories Various authors

HarperCollins, £20

This collection of original short stories featuring Agatha Christie's much-loved sleuth Jane Marple are penned by 12 current bestselling authors, all aiming to introduce the unassuming old lady with a sparkle in her eye to a new generation. The stories, many set in Marple's quiet village of St Mary Mead, will delight fans old and new. Everyone will have their own favourites. Mine was Kate Mosse's majestic The Mystery Of The Acid Soil which sees Marple holiday in Sussex to visit her dear friend Emmeline.

During her train journey, she meets a young curate worrying about the disappearance of the woman he loves and she decides to investigate.

Dreda Say Mitchell's Deadly Wedding Day is also a delight, with Marple teaming up with close friend Miss Bella to uncover the killer of a young guest at the wedding of Miss Bella's niece.

Elly Griffiths's Murder At The Villa Rosa, which sees Marple go on holiday to Italy's Amalfi coast, Ruth Ware's Miss Marple's Christmas and Lucy Foley's Evil In Small Places are also devilishly good.

This collection will delight Marple's legion of fans.

The

The Striped Pyjamas. Steeped in grief and guilt and coloured by complicity and courage, it tells the story of Bruno's elder sister, the long-widowed 91-year-old Gretel who is forced to confront the darkness of her family's Nazi past in the quiet ordinariness of her present.

Boyne skilfully traces her story back to 1946 as conflicted Gretel and her unrepentant mother flee Poland for Paris, leaving behind horrific memories of all that happened in Auschwitz where 12-year-old Gretel's beloved, monstrous father was commandant of the concentration camp.

The story charts the path of her life from France to Australia and on to the luxury London mansion block where she's lived for years, keeping her troubling secret.

When a young family moves in to an apartment in her block, Gretel's carefully controlled world begins to start falling apart, but the novel begins to buckle too.

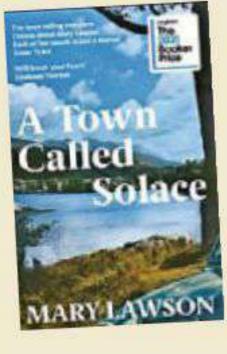

Gretel watches the troubling relationship between vulnerable, nine-year-old Henry - the same age as her brother Bruno when he died - and his aggressive father Alex Darcy-Witt. As the father becomes more abusive, Gretel decides that she must act.

But Darcy-Witt has discovered the disturbing truth of Gretel's past, forcing her to choose between selfpreservation or protecting Henry; the choice she makes is unbelievable and out of character.

All The Broken Places is a compelling read dealing with culpability, responsibility and Gretel's life-long guilt, but the novel is derailed by Boyne's evasive, overthe-top ending.

Empire Historian William Dalrymple and broadcaster Anita Anand delve into the British Empire's history.

They explain that while children may learn about the Roman or Ottoman empires in school, the British Empire is rarely touched upon. And they aim to rectify this by telling its story, from the origins of the East India Company to India's independence.

TWELVE NEW STORIES

ON AGATHA CHRISTIA

In the first episode, William points out the parallels between the East India Company and the way huge corporations today wield global power to rival governments. They also visit Powis Castle in Wales to see the Indian artefacts.

The podcast is less formal than their other ventures, with the trio cracking jokes between more serious chats.

In a recent episode, they outlined the challenges faced by the incoming Prime Minister during her first weeks in office.

Top civil servant Gus O'Donnell explains what will be on Liz Truss's to-do list, from uniting different factions of the Conservative party, to tackling issues like the Northern Ireland Protocol.

Marketing expert Charlotte Williams and science journalist Amit Katwala look into the history of things we consume, from drinks to toilet paper.

In an episode about perfume,

Charlotte visits Azzi Glasser who creates bespoke scents to help actors get into their roles. Previous clients include Orlando Bloom, Helena Bonham Carter and Jude Law, while she describes making a scent reminiscent of lemon drizzle cake for Johnny Depp when he played the Mad Hatter.

They also discover musk scents were accidentally created by a chemist in the 1880s who was trying to invent an alternative to TNT.

LeAnn Rimes god's work

There's "a stirring in the deep end" of her waters, the country icon tells us on Awakening, "so it overflows, it overflows".

Well, we've all had nights like that.

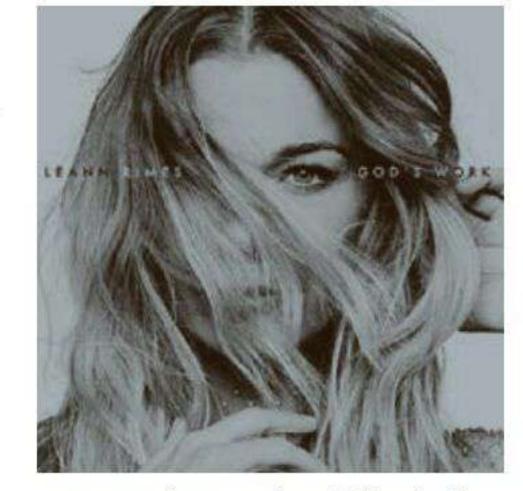

Very few people have lived a life like LeAnn's, though.

A star at 13, she has won two Grammys, judged on RuPaul's Drag Race, and her 1997 smash hit How Do I Live was the biggest-selling country single of all time - until her fan Taylor Swift topped it.

Now just 40, LeAnn also won the 2020 US series of The Masked Singer, duetted with Elton, and had a brutal Claymation battle with Wu Tung Clan's Ol' Dirty Bastard on MTV's Celebrity Deathmatch.

The singer channels her inner

ee cummings on her 17th studio album, doing away with capital letters on a title likely to perplex conservative Christians, although her message is spiritual throughout.

She's also at her most musically diverse. Throw My Arms Around the World is percussive with an almost Middle Eastern vibe.

The Only, gospel-tinged Americana with an upbeat, pop-reggae feel, features guest stars Ziggy Marley, soul sensation Ledisi and Ben Harper. It's a song about loneliness and the need for humanity to pull together, concluding, "The only way we're gonna get there is if we hold each other's hand".

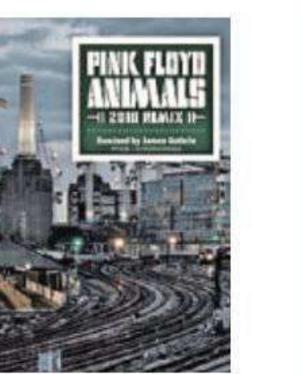

Other guests include Mickey Guyton, Sheila E and Robert Randolph whose guitar blazes on the powerful, soulful title track.

LeAnn's warm contralto is still sensational, especially on opening ballad Spaceship, the tender How Much Can A Heart Hold, and the ecstatic Awakening which of course reflects on a spiritual one.

The album's abiding message is hope, with tracks including Something Better's Coming and There Will Be A Better Day.

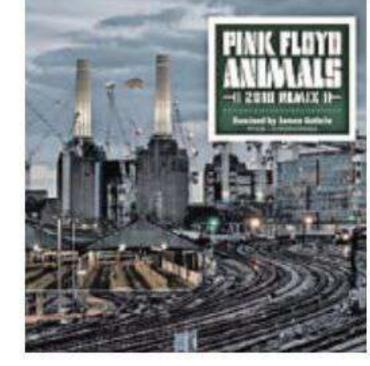

Fingers crossed.

As LeAnn reminds us, "It's hard enough already just to survive".

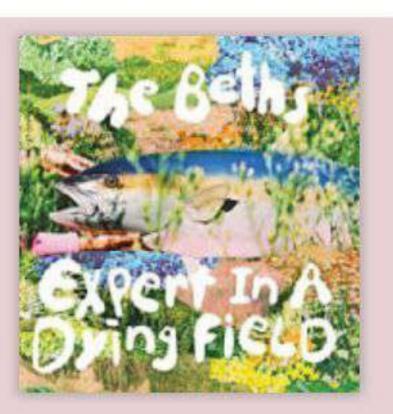

Marcus Mumford Self-Titled

Mumford & Sons are a multiplatinum sensation, but their trademark "hoedown pop" is absent from Marcus's solo debut. It opens bravely with Cannibal, the singer's raw memory of childhood abuse - "I can still taste you and I hate it". Highs include swaggering rocker Grace and Better Off High with a hook huge enough to land Moby Dick.

Pink Floyd Animals

Floyd's 10th album, lavishly re-released today, is their most forlorn. 1977's Animals lacks the warmth and sax appeal of Dark Side but drags you in like quicksand as they confront themes of death, loneliness and greed. The caustic Dogs snaps at the worst of humanity: "You have to be trusted by the people you lie to," sings Dave Gilmour.

The Beths Expert In A Dying Field

Few bands lift the heart quite like The Beths. The New Zealanders' exhilarating new album blends addictive tunes with Liz Stokes's smart, selfaware lyrics. The "dying field" appears to be her own turbulent love life. Abundant hooks and sweet harmonies can't hide the pain. "If this is love," she asks on Your Side, "why do you have to leave?"

ONE of the remarkable things about the many huge public gatherings to salute the wonderful service of Her Majesty the Queen has been the number of young children eager to take part. Boys and girls have expressed their admiration for the late monarch with great clarity and feeling.

You expect the older generation to join the many tributes, but how wonderful to see schoolchildren able to express their admiration for the Queen's devoted service.

The death of Queen Elizabeth was an extremely sad episode in our country's history, yet it has turned into a joyous occasion as people recall so many humorous moments in her historic reign.

Never in my lifetime did I expect to see such a worldwide overwhelming outpouring of grief and love for a single person.

We, as a country, have had little to be proud of for many years but the send-off we have given our late Queen, without doubt, must make millions once again proud to be British.

It is a spectacle that will go down in the annals of our history for ever. To quote a song by Carly Simon,

■ I take my hat off to all those who are waiting for hours to file past Her Majesty's coffin as she lies in state at Westminster Hall.

September 8, 2022 will be forever remembered in the history of our proud country as the date our gracious Queen of more than 70 years passed away.

Elizabeth II has now left the royal duties to her eldest son, King Charles III, who has been well prepared for the role.

Horwood say he's worried Kaye Adams will struggle with the revealing outfits and sex appeal of the Latin dances on this series of Strictly (Mirror, Sept 14)? Host Jo Brand is joined by celebrity fans Harry Hill, Melvin Odoom and Roisin Conaty to discuss the new batch of bakers and to tuck into the events of Cake Week.

PROFESSOR T ITV, 9pm

DAPPER Jasper Tempest (Ben Miller) returns as the know-it-all University of Cambridge criminology professor who also moonlights as a police consultant.

Like the inviting theme tune, there is something both intriguing and beguiling about this detective series – which is now enjoying a well-deserved second run.

The air of disdain Jasper has for everyone around him makes for great comedy, even more so when we see snapshots of what he's really thinking.

He has obsessive compulsive disorder and is a stickler for just about everything.

His world is haunted by ghosts of the past. The first episode, called Ring of Fire, starts with him shrieking in bed as startling flashbacks from his early life emerge.

There was, lest we forget, the apparent revelation that he had shot his father at the end of series one. But he is not the only one having a bad night.

Cue shattering windows, flames and chaotic scenes as his former student, DC Lisa Donckers, is called to a fire in student digs.

When police discover it was started deliberately, and the student left badly burned and in a coma had been drugged, they reluctantly draft in Jasper.

The crime, which he'll surely solve, is secondary to the brilliant power plays between characters, none more so than with Jasper and his hilarious, battle-axe mother Adelaide (Frances de la Tour).

When Jasper confides he's going to see a psychologist for help, Adelaide is the first to suggest: "Is that wise?"

That psychologist is Dr Helena Goldberg, played by none other than new cast member Juliet Stevenson, who will surely unearth a few more home truths.

MORTIMER & WHITEHOUSE: GONE FISHING BBC2, 9pm

Don't be put off by the rather drab sounding title. Paul Whitehouse and Bob Mortimer's gentle musings on life, in waders or in camping chairs by a river, are well worth a watch.

Clearly many people agree as the comedians are back for a fifth series as they riff off each other, whether it's a serious conversation about their health, or affectionate rivalry about catching a prize fish.

This time they are again joined by trusty terrier Ted as they travel to North Wales to fish the River Dee for the glorious grayling, a fish which has so far eluded them.

They reflect on ageing, discussing what it might be like to live for ever, and Bob challenges Ted to a riverbank running race.

You might expect a fishing series to be about as gripping as watching paint dry... but this is so much more than that. These two can turn the smallest moments into comedy gold.

Watch out for Bob having a go at what he's seen kids do - down a bottle of lemonade in one. It doesn't end well.

THE GRAND TOUR: A SCANDI FLICK

Prime Video

Jeremy Clarkson, Richard Hammond and James May are clearly pleased as punch to have fled the UK for the first time in years.

The first episode of season five sees them in sub-zero temperatures - 124 miles north of the Arctic Circle - and on an insane mission to discover who has the best rally car.

James is in a Mitsubishi Evo. Richard reckons he's already got winning wheels, in his blue Subaru Impreza. Jeremy is driving an Audi RS4, which the others don't believe even qualifies as a rally car.

Their action-packed journey sees them travel from the coast of Norway to the Russian border.

There's a crash when they race in an old Cold War submarine base, which leaves James in hospital nursing a broken rib.

Then there are pyrotechnics as James pimps up his exhaust and speeds across a frozen lake. And there's even a spot of one-legged skijoring - which you'll just have to watch to appreciate.

programmes are listed in British Summer Time (BST).

Bonus setback table express for John Lewis

£99M LOSS PUTS STAFF PAYOUT AT RISK

JOHN Lewis has warned staff may lowest paid workers, the group said it not get a bonus this year after the cost-of-living crisis caused the high-street giant to suffer a near £100million half-year loss.

The group behind John Lewis and the Waitrose supermarket chain said a "substantial strengthening of performance" was needed to justify a payout to its 76,000 workers known as partners.

The John Lewis Partnership restored the bonus last year – at 3% COSTS For of staff salary – after scrapping it in 2020 for the first time since 1953.

But it came as the employeeowned group yesterday announced extra support. As well as providing free food at work for 14 weeks over winter, it also confirmed one-off cost-of-living payments equal to £500 for a full-time staff member.

Together with a 4% wage rise for the amounted to £45m of help.

Results showed losses ballooned to £99m for the six months to the end of July, up from £29m the same time last

> Dame Sharon White, chairman of the John Lewis Partnership, said: "We have made the very conscious choice to forego profit so we can prioritise support for our partners, customers, our suppliers, and communities."

Sales at John Lewis rose by 3% to John Lewis & Partners £2.1billion, but fell 5% to £3.6bn at Waitrose.

> The group, like other firms, is also battling a jump in costs just as customers rein in their spending in the face of soaring household bills.

> It warned trading in the all-important last three months of the year was still "highly uncertain".

Sofa chain DFS yesterday revealed a slump in annual profits as cash-strapped households cut back on spending. The retailer revealed that orders had "softened markedly", reflecting a trend seen widely across the furniture industry. Profits at DFS dived 43% to £58.5million in the 12 months to the end

NNSHEED OF ANERA

COMMENT BY ANDY DUNN Chief Sports Writer @andydunnmirror_

IF you decide to watch Roger Federer announce his retirement from tennis in a four-and-halfminute social-media post, then prepare to be unsurprised.

Unsurprised not only that age - he bows out at 41 and an increasingly tough battle with injuries mean he will make his final appearance as a professional player in the Laver Cup in London next week.

But also unsurprised at the slickness of the announcement, unsurprised how Federer – in front of a cool, white backdrop - is word-perfect, slick and hits all the right notes.

Because never mind the astonishing statistics and achievements, never mind the numbers, remember the style.

Of course, his 20 Grand Slam titles, his eight Wimbledon crowns, his 103 is HOW he collected those career tournament wins, his 237 consecutive weeks as pictures in the way that world No 1, define Federer's sporting career.

Those figures tell you he is the greatest grass-court player of all time, tell you he has a claim to be THE greatest player of all time, tell you he is in the conversation when it comes to discussing Federer was the throwback the greatest sportsman of all time. They tell you he is in Tiger Woods territory, Serena Williams territory.

What they do not tell you figures. They do not paint Federer painted pictures on a tennis court.

Of the Big Three – and to accrue those triumphs mainly in the era of Rafa Nadal and Novak Djokovic was remarkable in itself -Federer was the artist, handed brutality.

His languid brilliance was matched by his longevity. Elite tennis is punishing, as Andy Murray – Federer's great friend and rival knows only too well. But Federer won his first Wimbledon in 2003, beating Mark Philippoussis in straight sets, and his last in 2017, beating Marin Cilic, also in three sets, his final Grand Slam triumph coming the following year in Australia.

And in a sport where most are, forgive the pun, highlygenius in an era of doublestrung, Federer also managed to keep a lid on his > temper for most of the time. Not all the time, but most of the time. Unlike many. In short, Federer – a philanthropist who has raised millions for charity through his foundation and whose charming wife and family have been part of his life for so long – has always seemed to be too good to be true.

But for once, that adage is utterly wrong. Federer has just been too good not to go down as one of the finest sportsmen ever.

He has certainly been one of the most wonderful to watch in a career full of trophies...but also in a career full of seemingly effortless excellence.

And that is the ultimate trick of the true sporting great.

FROM BACK PAGE must recognise it's the time to end my career."

His last match will be next week at the Laver Cup in London, where he will compete with Rafa Nadal, Novak Djokovic and Andy

Murray, "I will miss everything the tour has given me," he added. "I was lucky to play so many epic matches that I will never forget and I always tried my best to respect the history of the game."

gave them a 2-1 victory.

there at the end that were there at the beginning. It's a bit of a shame because they missed a great match. It's not probably because they didn't want to stay. "But if you've got to get a bus

BOXING TRIPLE G V CANELO

SAUL CANELO ALVAREZ'S career will be on the line when he faces bitter rival Gennady Golovkin in their trilogy fight in Las Vegas, says Eddie Hearn.

Hearn is promoting the muchanticipated third fight between these two greats (above) and feels the pressure is on Alvarez because he was comprehensively beaten by Dmitry Bivol in his last fight.

That was at light-heavyweight and Hearn feels a second successive loss in tomorrow night's clash with Golovkin for the undisputed world super-middleweight title would damage Alvarez's standing.

"I think all the pressure is on Canelo, coming off the Bivol defeat," said the Matchroom chief. "One more defeat and he's not in a good place.

"There are a lot of people starting to get on the Gennady Golovkin train and I think there's a bit more pressure on Alvarez because that aura of invincibility since the Bivol fight has kind of evaporated."

Hearn feels that taking the fight to Golovkin, who has ruled at middleweight since 2010, is risky.

"Canelo wants to go to war with Gennady Golovkin," he said. "He says he wants to go in dominate and destroy Gennady Golovkin, walk him down, and beat him up.

"If he chooses to do that, he will get caught. Does Canelo Alvarez punch hard enough to take Golovkin out with one shot? It's going to take a sledgehammer to stop Golovkin."

MUZZA SLAMS TIMINGS

BY DAVID McCARTHY

ANDY MURRAY has hit out at tennis scheduling after Britain's Davis Cup clash with the USA in Glasgow ended at 1am in a halffull Emirates Arena.

Fans were unable to witness the conclusion of a terrific contest that ended with Murray and Joe Salisbury losing to Rajeev Ram and Jack Sock in the doubles in three sets after almost three hours. The win for the Americans

Murray (below) said: "That match we played, there were probably half of the people in or train home, you can't do it."

trust Tyson Fury. Joshua (above) has agreed to Fury's terms to meet finally on December 3 in the UK. But Hearn is now waiting for the WBC heavyweight king's promoters to send him the fight contract.

"My biggest concern is - and what I won't allow to happen - I'm not having AJ not fighting in December because we made that decision for him to fight that month," said Matchroom chief Hearn.

"I'm working on December 17 as well while we go because I can't put AJ's future in the hands of Fury."

EMMA RADUCANU suffered another injury scare in a disappointing defeat by Germany's Anna-Lena Friedsam at the WTA tournament in Portoroz.

Raducanu (right) took a wild card into the Slovenia event and was the top seed but fell to a 7-5 0-6 6-3 defeat in the second round.

She opened up a 5-3 lead in the first set over qualifier

Friedsam, who is ranked down at 213, although she has been a top-50 player.

Raducanu then lost four games in a row and took a medical time-out at the end of the first set and had her left thigh heavily strapped but breezed through the second set - only to come up short in the decider.

If fit Raducanu is due to play in South Korea next week.

MYSTERY surrounds the failed test that saw Classic-winning jockey Sean Levey stood down from last night's Racing League finale at Newcastle.

The 34-year-old, who led the riders' standings for the team-based competition going into the Racing League's sixth and final night - Levey had three booked mounts at Gosforth Park - was prevented from partnering Miss Down Under at Sandown Park owing to "medical reasons".

The British Horseracing Authority declined to expand on the "confidential" grounds for Levey's absence, but the Swaziland-born jockey (below) successful on Billesdon Brook for boss Richard Hannon in the 1,000 Guineas four years ago - has also been ruled out of Hannon had "no idea" as to the background leading to Levey's non-appearance - a £20,000 bonus is on offer to the Racing League's top jockey while his agent Sash Righton said: "Sean has been stood down for medical reasons."

The news comes 10 days after champion apprentice Marco Ghiani was stopped from riding at Brighton pending a BHA investigation.

Jockeys found guilty of failing tests for prohibited substances face a six-month riding ban.

BY GIDEON BROOKS

JOS BUTTLER insisted it felt "great to be back" in Pakistan after England ended their self-imposed 17-year absence and marked his squad's arrival with a donation to the flood disaster appeal.

The England's white-ball captain struck the perfect note with a collective donation from his players to the country's emergency flood appeal - thought to be over five figures and set to be matched by the ECB.

It was a gesture warmly recieved at his opening press conference in Karachi and earned Buttler (above) a generous round of applause.

He is expecting a more hostile welcome on the pitch over the course of a seven-match series, but insisted that will be perfect to help his side get "battle-hardened" for next month's T20 World Cup in Australia.

England's return to Pakistan has been a long time in the making. Concerns over security and terrorism had kept them away.

Buttler, who hopes to be fit for the end of the tour if he recovers from a calf muscle injury, said: "It's great to be back after a long time.

"We know the tough times the people of Pakistan are facing at the moment with the floods and we hope us being here can uplift that a little bit and raise spirits by seeing us play." ■ ENGLAND play four T20s in Karachi (Sept 20, 22, 23, and 25) and three in Lahore (Sept 28, 30 and Oct 2) all start at 3.30pm live on Sky Sports.

Alsop ton halts Worcester's bid

SUSSEX'S Tom Alsop led the resistance with an unbeaten century as WORCESTERSHIRE'S promotion hopes suffered a huge setback.

Alsop's 137 not out - his fourth Championship hundred of the season - helped take Sussex to 312-6, a lead of 94, when the players shook hands with 13 overs remaining.

Worcestershire picked up 14 points but they are 28 points behind secondplaced Middlesex in Division Two with two games to play and will almost certainly be staying down next season.

Saif Zaib's first century of the season for NORTHAMPTONSHIRE frustrated SURREY'S title ambitions as their Division One match ended in a draw. The left-hander, restored to Championship duties for the first time since May, struck 124 in a 204-minute vigil.

Wigan v Leeds 8pm EXCLUSIVE

BY DAVE CRAVEN RL Correspondent @DCravenRL

ZAK HARDAKER is getting deja vu about Leeds' surprise title push - spelling bad news for his former side Wigan.

The Betfred Super League giants go head-to-head at DW Stadium tonight for a place in next Saturday's Grand Final.

Much-fancied Wigan have been in the top two almost all season and have already lifted the Challenge Cup.

In contrast, Rhinos feared a relegation dogfight until Rohan Smith arrived in May.

They only confirmed their play-offs spot with a dramatic late win against Castleford on the last day of the regular campaign.

But Leeds' stunning surge saw them finish fifth, bringing back memories of when they became the first team to win

He helped knock out Catalans in Perpignan last week and it is no surprise he fancies Leeds' chances of pulling off another shock.

Hardaker said: "It kind of mirrors what happened in 2012. That last time we had to go to Catalans and Wigan so there's a lot of familiar processes. It is weird.

AINSLEY MAITLAND-NILES is an FA Cup winner and England international but Ralph Hasenhuttl says he needs to learn new skills to prosper at Southampton.

Maitland-Niles (right) joined on a season-long loan on transfer deadline day after being told he did not have a role at Arsenal. Saints boss Hasenhuttl, whose side travel to Aston Villa tonight, said: "He is a very good player on the ball but he has to learn that our game starts when the ball is not with us.

"This is something he has never needed to do at the clubs he was playing in but in our football this is a very crucial part. This is something he still has to learn and Maitland-Niles, who won the last of his five England caps in 2020, turned down a late offer from Crystal Palace in favour of Saints. Hasenhuttl added: "We go under the radar but this makes it easier for young players to develop."

Now Williamson wants to transplant the feelgood factor - and big numbers - into Arsenal's pursuit of domestic glory.

After lifting the Euros trophy at Wembley in July (below), she admitted: "A day hasn't gone by when I haven't thought about it, and I'm dreading the day when I don't think about it at least once.

"I'm a big softie, I like fairytale endings and you couldn't really have written it much better.

"Last season it went down to the wire and we missed out by the finest of margins. It hurt me a lot and it tired me.

"In the summer, the closer we got to the final the more you realised that, if it's not successful, you have to do it all over again to get a shot at lifting the trophy.

"That's given me a little bit of fire back in my belly. Once you've got a taste for winning, obviously you want more.

"Before the final, I spoke about coping with the big occasion and, if you have never walked out on to that stage, how are you ever going to know if you are ready to deal with it?

"I was happy with how I handled the pressure, and starting a new season will be another test."

Arsenal's line-up will include England's player of the tournament and Euro 2022 leading scorer Beth Mead, with Gunners boss Jonas Eidevall saying: "Beth brought the same intensity to the Euros as she had been doing with us. Now she brings the same intensity back to Arsenal again."

N FOREST V FULHAM

PREMIER LEAGUE KICK-OFF 8PM

FULHAM'S infamous summer transfer dealings four years ago offer the clearest cautionary tale for Nottingham Forest.

But current manager Marco Silva insists it is the job of any coach to ensure that new players adapt and settle as quickly as possible.

The two clubs facing off tonight were locking horns in the Championship last season and with loans ending and players out of contract Forest splashed £145million on 2 players.

By contrast Fulham's £55m spent on 11 players seems almost stingy.

But after a solid start that recruitment already looks far better than after promotion in 2018.

That summer the Cottagers lashed out £100m on 14 players yet under Slavisa Jokanovic they never gelled and a shambolic season saw them relegated with 26 points.

Portuguese manager Silva, 45, defended predecessor Jokanovic but acknowledged the scale of the task facing Steve Cooper, with Forest standing one place off the bottom.

Silva said: "It was their decision to do it by the board and the manager.

"The number of new players is really big but they felt it was the right moment to do it.

"It is our job as managers to help settle the players that come in. If they all come at the same moment at the beginning of pre-season or in the first two or three weeks, that is a big help for the managers.

"You don't need the time once the competition has started to get the ideas and philosophies over to the players. But you have to be ready for everything.

"We have it here with our players as well, some they are not 100 percent adapted for our ideas and it will take more time, but it is part of the job. We signed players to have competition between all the squad and to reach another level.

"Not just for numbers, but for some added quality. Now I have a headache every time picking the team.

"I don't want to talk about that 2018 situation. I don't know what happened, what type of conversations there were or what Slavisa's idea was. But I do know it wasn't 20 players."

The 42-year-old (right) has been named as featuring on the radar of the Seagulls in their search for a new boss after Graham Potter left to join Chelsea.

Cooper also has a reputation as one of the best up-and-coming young coaches after guiding Forest to promotion to the Premier League. But the Welshman, in the final year of his contract, is not getting distracted ahead of Fulham's visit tonight.

Cooper said: "Everyone, who knows me, knows what working for Nottingham Forest means to me and how important it is, especially after losing a couple of games. It matters more to me. That is the only thing on my mind, the job I am doing here on a daily basis, it is consuming enough as it is.

"But I love my time here, I love working with the players, I love the staff, I love the city, so that is the only thing that is on my mind."

Forest are now next to bottom after losing their last three Premier League games.

That his number was the third of three to be lit up by the fourth official was almost cruel - the hook had been inevitable after as ineffective a performance as the £100million recruit has put in for Manchester City.

Backlash follows shock choice to postpone games

THE decision to postpone last weekend's football fixtures caused a backlash against the Premier League, EFL and the FA.

It also came as a shock to other sports, who were on a DCMS conference call last Friday when Government officials tried to give the bodies advice after the Queen's death.

It is understood several participants on the call, which started at 9.20am, left thinking that the Premier League would play their games last weekend.

Perhaps that even influenced the thinking of other sports and is why cricket, rugby and golf all played last weekend, albeit the ECB had the benefit of being able to postpone Friday's play and then continue.

HUMAN rights campaigners Reprieve have urged Saudi-owned Newcastle, via North East MPs, not to become complicit in sportswashing.

Soraya Bauwens, Deputy Director of Reprieve, said: "The Newcastle takeover is a way for the government of Saudi Arabia to reshape its global image. If this proceeds without any dialogue on human rights this will send a message to them that they can use Newcastle to sportswash their atrocities, and that Newcastle United will turn a blind eye."

But there was genuine shock in other sports and among other participants when, just over an hour later, the Premier League announced all games off.

Meanwhile, other sports opted to play on. Were they influenced by football?

The Premier League have stressed they could not take any decision without the approval of the 20 clubs and it was a shareholders' meeting which ultimately decided.

Some clubs expressed surprise there was not clearer guidance in place over what to do after the Queen's death, bearing in mind there is always so much forward planning.

But the DCMS have been determined to allow sports to decide what is the best way to pay their respects and that was the essence of the call.

Areola had seemed to deliberately bump into Stefan Thordarson and collapse to the

This was the home side's first proper European tie for 21 years and a nervy last 15 minutes was set up by Soren Tengstedt's goal after Jarrod Bowen had lost the ball, triggering a quick break.

But Areola saved well from Tonni Adamsen late on to clinch the win.

RODGERS

BY BRENDAN McLOUGHLIN

BRENDAN RODGERS has warned there is no hiding place for his Leicester players after their horror start to the season.

The Foxes are bottom of the Premier League heading into tomorrow's trip to Tottenham. A 5-2 trouncing by Brighton in their last outing made it five top-flight defeats in a row, leaving Rodgers under serious pressure. The Leicester boss (above) said: "There's clearly been a lot of noise over the start we've had. That's what happens when you don't win.

"My job is to keep up the spirit of the team and keep them fighting.

"You can't become timid. You have to continue to be aggressive.

"We have a number of games between now and the World Cup when it isn't all going to be about talent.

"The talent alone won't be enough. You have to be able to dig in and show grit, strength and spirit."

It is the first time Rodgers has found his job under scrutiny since he was at Liverpool. They sacked him seven years ago to make way for Jurgen Klopp - but he insists he is stronger for having gone through those tough times at Anfield.

He added: "I think the experience really helps you. I was a young manager back then and I was at a club where everything is scrutinized.

"I feel really at home here at Leicester, that is the reality."

MARSCH IS BANNED & FINED £10K

LEEDS manager Jesse Marsch has been given a one-match touchline ban and fined £10,000 following a run-in with officials during his side's heavy defeat at Brentford.

Marsch (above) was sent off in the second half of the 5-2 loss on September 3 for remonstrating with the fourth official after his side were denied a penalty.

The American, 48, later accused officials of having a "lack of respect". In a statement the FA said: "The manager admitted that his language and behaviour during the 64th minute of that game was improper."

another said 'Sorry for your loss Michael Fagan', a reference to the intruder who broke into the Queen's Buckingham Palace bedroom in 1982.

A UEFA statement said: "Proceedings have been opened against Celtic FC regarding a banner displayed."

AFTER TWO YEARS DIER GETS A LIONS LIFELINE

Versatile Tottenham defender back in frame

BY JOHN CROSS

ERIC DIER has been given an England lifeline after two years in the international wilderness.

Tottenham defender Dier, 28, has enjoyed a renaissance under Spurs boss Antonio Conte and now answers the call for England's biggest headache ahead of the World Cup.

Gareth Southgate has a huge dilemma at centre-half as Harry Maguire is not playing regularly for Manchester United, Kyle Walker is in the squad despite missing recent games through injury and there are huge question marks over the defence.

Dier won the last of his 45 caps two years ago, his last call-up came nearly 18 months ago.

And yet Southgate has always kept him in his thoughts because of his versatility of being able to play in defence, midfield and also being adept in a back three.

It is now a very close call between the likes of Conor Coady, Marc Guehi and Fikayo Tomori, while Arsenal's Ben White is nursing a hip injury and has started the season at right-back.

John Stones has the added benefit of experience as does Dier who was a mainstay at the 2018 World Cup which is the reason why Southgate was ready to turn back to the Spurs man.

England boss Southgate said: With Eric Dier, he has been playing well for a period of time. We think it is a really close call across our centre-backs and he has deserved to be picked back in the group.

We know what a good character he is. He fits in with the culture and has great international experience and leadership qualities."

The other headache for Southgate is the lack of game-time

FROM BACK PAGE Frank about him last season. His form and his qualities - not only his goalscoring but his technical ability, build-up play and aerial prowess - gives us a different threat to some of the other players we could pick." Toney has hit five goals in six Premier League games this season, and his England call-up is set to earn his former club Peterborough an extra £1million as part of the add-on agreement from his £10m-plus switch to Brentford in 2020.

It is a chance for Toney but a new blow for Marcus Rashford (above), who has missed out on the squad because of a muscle injury.

The Manchester United striker is running out of time to get a place in the squad for Qatar because he was left out of the last two get-togethers.

But Southgate (above, top) added: "He is a player we know well so if he can perform at a high level in the next few weeks, he of course will be under consideration."

for the likes of Maguire who has been relegated to starting Europa League games under Erik ten Hag.

That is a similar story for a few players in the squad as some have only just come back after injury but left-back is a big problem because neither Ben Chilwell or Luke Shaw have been starting for their clubs.

Southgate said: "Clearly, we have a number of players including Ben Chilwell, Luke Shaw, Harry Maguire and Kalvin Phillips who are not playing a lot of minutes with their club.

"It is not ideal, but we feel they have been and can be important players for us.

"Although It is not a perfect situation there is still a lot of football to be played before Qatar."

Southgate also stressed that the games with Italy and Germany are huge now with the clock ticking.

He added: "This is a bigger than normal squad and part of the rationale is that we are very close to a World Cup and we feel, although our results were disappointing

summer, we have picked on the basis of form and capability over a long period.

"This will be a great test for us and a crucial part of our preparation for the World Cup.

"It is only eight weeks until we will be naming our squad for Qatar so every minute counts."

BY MATTHEW DUNN

ANTONIO CONTE has told Yves Bissouma that he needs to pay more attention to his defensive duties if he wants to force his way into the Tottenham team.

The club paid £25million to Brighton for the Mali international (above), but so far he has made just one start and seen less than two hours' total action in the Premier League this season.

However, Conte is not impressed by the 26-year-old's price tag - he will keep him in the background until he learns the defensive discipline he desires.

"With the ball, he's really good. Defensively, he has to pay more attention," said Conte.

"More attention because we only have two midfielders and they have to be good with the ball and without the ball, but I'm really happy with his signing.

"You need to have players to go into our idea of football.

"The midfielder is a specific role for us, with the ball and without the ball.

"But we are talking about a player that has great skill, good running.

"We need only a bit of time to work with Bissouma, for him to understand and to understand well.

"When you have players like Heung-Min Son, Richarlison, Dejan Kulusevski and Harry Kane, I think the best system we can play is with two midfielders."

HUDDERSFIELD admit they must get the right head coach as they search for Danny Schofield's successor.

Schofield (above) was sacked on Wednesday after just nine games in charge with the Terriers next to bottom of the Championship with four points.

Former Manchester United caretaker boss Michael Carrick and Plymouth's Steven Schumacher linked to the job.

Head of football operations Leigh Bromby said: "We are under no illusions as to how crucial a decision this will be. In no uncertain terms, we must get it right."

TIME'S UP BETWEEN STICKS FOR FOSTER

FORMER England goalkeeper Ben Foster has announced his retirement.

The 39-year-old left Watford at the end of last season and has decided to bring an end to a career spanning almost two decades.

Foster (left) was capped eight times by England having joined Manchester United from Stoke as a youngster. After announcing his retirement on his YouTube channel, he said had been approached by Newcastle but "deep down I didn't want to do it".

"I've got to be happy and comfortable and I wouldn't be able to do that so far away from my family. It would kill me."

And now the clamour is growing for Gareth Southgate to start with 19-year-old Bellingham at the spotlight in Qatar.

Bellingham – already on 15 caps and included in England's latest 28-man squad - plays with no fear, and his marauding midfield displays are drawing comparisons to England legend Bryan Robson

The biggest clubs are already circling as Real Madrid and believe it's happened. Liverpool regard him as the most exciting young midfield talent in the Champions League.

Brummie Bellingham reinforced that message in Dortmund's narrow defeat at Manchester City on Wednesday.

It was he who ran the game with a box-to-box display that proved he is ready for England. He has been in and around the squad for the past two years and played at the Euros, but is now ready for the step up into the starting XI alongside Declan Rice in England's midfield engine room.

shoulders and is tipped for a massive role in Qatar

He is refreshingly down-to-earth and has a strong family unit around him to guide him on and off the pitch.

Bellingham gave an interview to Dortmund's official podcast in the summer, which highlighted his attitude towards playing football professionally.

"I don't take it for granted," he said. "Every day I get up and I get to go to football. Not that it's a bad thing, but I have friends who have to be thrust into the to be up and go to lectures at uni.

> "I was never great in school, I was average. I don't know what I'd be doing if it wasn't for football. To be able to play football all day is living the dream.

"I'm no better than anyone here just because I can kick a ball around."

snatch him from Birmingham's academy, but he stayed loyal to his boyhood heroes and ensured they got the best deal possible.

Now there is a special bond with Dortmund fans.

"I feel that if you make the effort to buy a shirt or come to a game, if you go through the effort, if you spend the money, then I'm a puppet. I will sign whatever, take however many pictures," he said.

"I'll do them all because it's half an hour to make someone's day or have a kit that's signed for life. It's nothing really.

"What else would I be doing in that time? Messing around on YouTube?

"There is something between us. I think it is because they appreciate I will do a lot to win for the club. I feel at home here and that is because of them.

"In the city, they are always so respectful.

"If I'm going to get shopping with my mum, they come up and, without bugging me, they say how nice it is to see me.

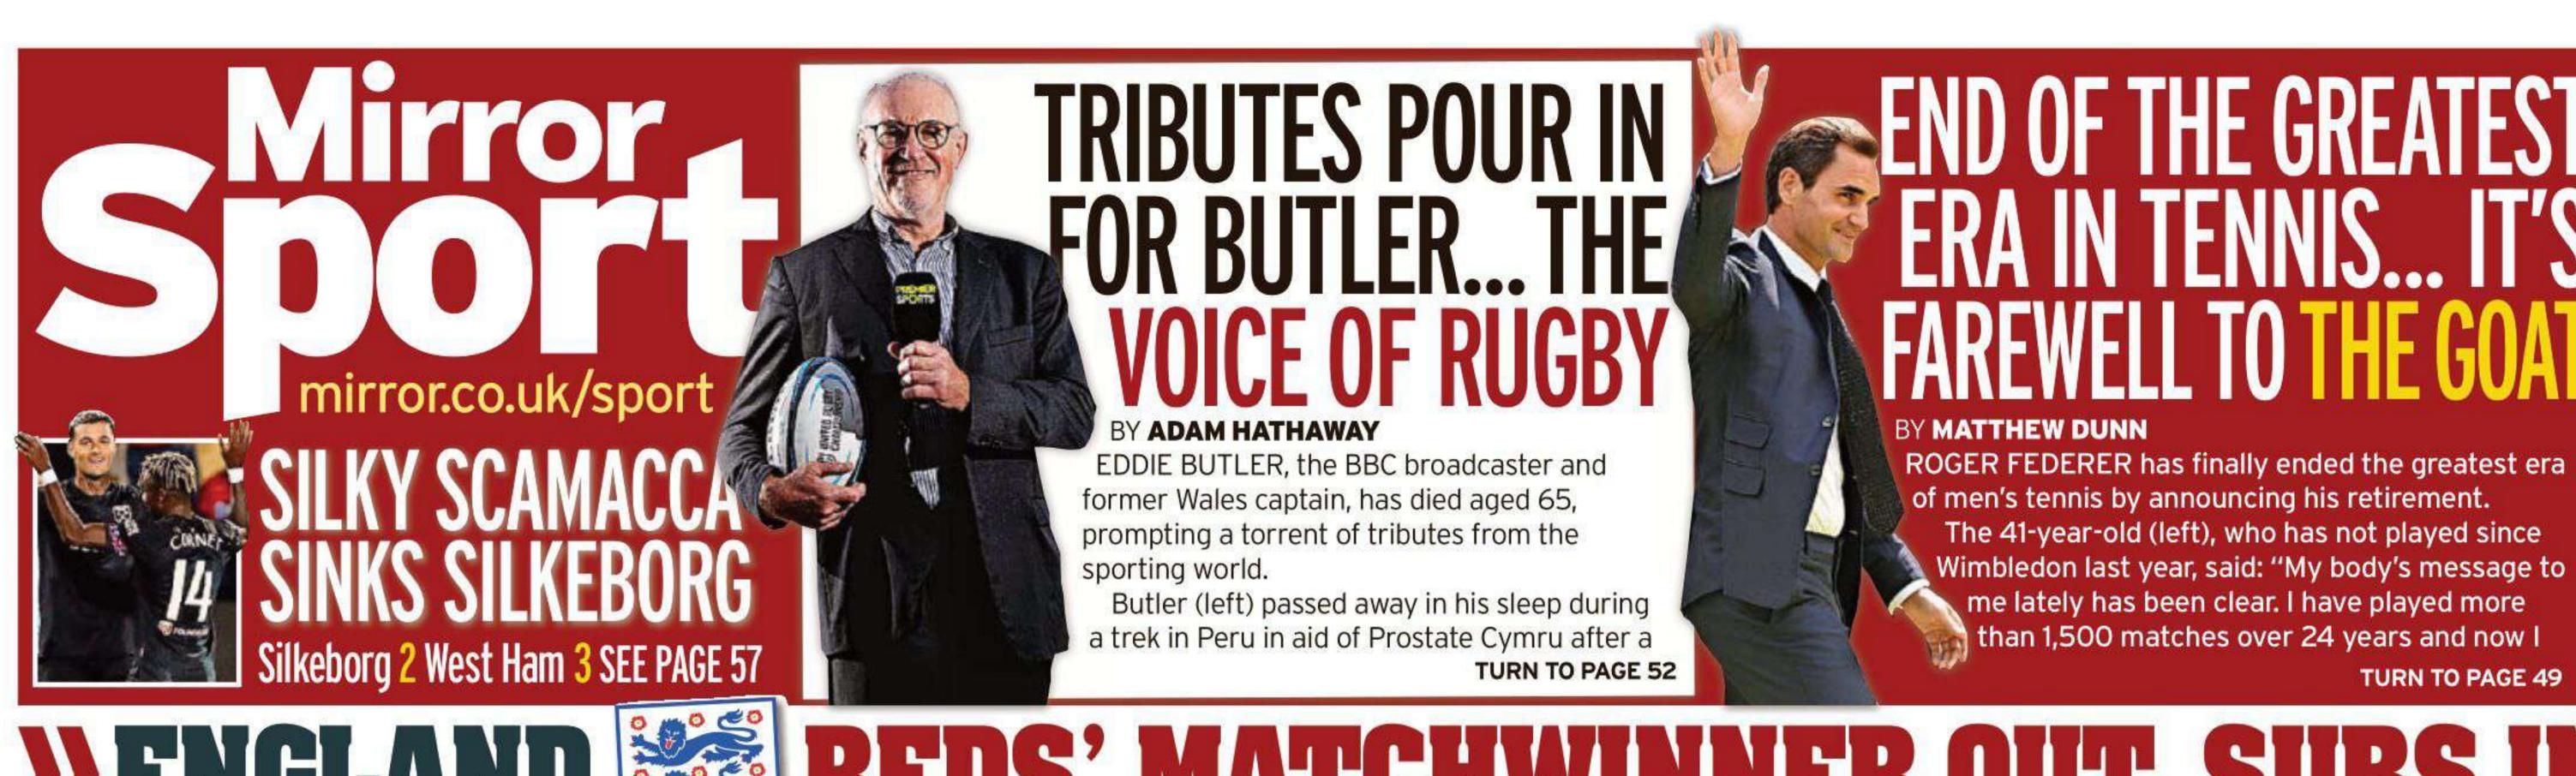

"It still feels surreal to see my name on the back of someone else and I will give whatever time I have to give to make them happy."

If Bellingham maintains his current progress, then he will have to get used to seeing his name on the back of a lot more shirts -The biggest clubs wanted to because he is destined for the top.

This simple cinnamon-spiced muffin recipe contains fibre-packed prunes and oats perfect for breakfast on-the-go or as an afternoon pick-me-up 175g self-raising flour 50g porridge oats 140g light muscovado sugar

2 tsp ground cinnamon 1/2 tsp bicarbonate of soda

1 egg, beaten 150ml 1/4 pint buttermilk

1 tsp vanilla extract 6 tbsp sunflower oil 175g stoned prune,

chopped 85g pecans

Heat the oven to 200C/gas 6/fan 180C. Butter 6-8 muffin tins or line them with muffin cases. Put the flour, oats, sugar, cinnamon and bicarbonate of soda in a large bowl, then rub everything through your fingers, as if making pastry, to ensure that all the ingredients are evenly blended.

Beat the egg, then stir in the buttermilk, vanilla and oil. Lightly stir the egg mix into the flour.

Fold the prunes and nuts into the mixture.

Divide between the tins, filling the cases to the brim, then bake for 20-25 minutes until risen and golden. Serve warm or cold.
